ep'i-cra'ni-um, 1 ep'i-krē'ni-um; 2 ĕp'i-erā'ni-ŭm, n. [-NI-A, pl.] 1. Anat. The combined coverings of the cranium. 2. Entom. The largest of three dorsal sclerites of the head, intermediate between clypeus and occiput, and surrounding the eyes. [< EPI- + CRANIUM.]

ep'i-cra'sis†, n. 1. The use of epicrastics. 2. Treatment tending to cure the defect of constitution causing the disease.

e-pic'ri-sis†, 1 i-pik'ri-sis; 2 e-pic'ri-sis, n. [-SES, 1 -siz; 2 -sēs, pl.] A decision or conclusion or estimate of a written work; a note, appendix, or review containing such estimate, especially upon the Old Testament.

ep'i-cri'sis‡, 1 ep'i-krī'sis; 2 ĕp'i-erī'sis, n. Med. A secondary crisis in the course of a disease.

ep'i-crys'tal-line, 1 ep'i-kris'ta-lin; 2 ĕp'i-erĭs'ta-lĭn, a. Geol. Both sedimentary and crystalline in character: said of strata.

In 1894, he thought that the epicrystalline condition of the Silurian rocks in the Alps might be due to original crystalline precipitation.

A. GEIKIE Text-Book Geol. p. 573, note. [MACM. 1885.]

Ep'i-ce-te'tian, 1 ep'i-tk-ti'shan; 2 ĕp'i-te-tē'shan, a. Belonging or relating to Epictetus, who taught the Stoic philosophy at Rome and Nicopolis in Epirus. He recognized the universal brotherhood principle, and insisted upon self-renunciation and self-restraint. See STOIC.

Ep'i-ce-te'tus, 1 ep'i-tk-ti'tŭs; 2 ĕp'i-te-tē'tŭs, n. A Greek Stoic philosopher (50?–125?): born a slave in Phrygia; banished from Rome by Domitian; taught in Epirus; Enchiridion.

The nobility and moral earnestness of Epictetus and the dignity and simplicity of his style have made him a favorite with many not otherwise interested in philosophy.

United Editors Encyc. vol. xiii. p. v.

ep'i-cure, 1 ep'i-kiūr; 2 ĕp'i-ekūr, n. 1. One who cultivates a delicate taste for eating and drinking.

HOLMES Over the Teacups p. 184. [H. M. & CO. 1891.]

2. One devoted to the gratification of appetite; a glutton; sensualist. 3. [E-] [Archaic.] An adherent of the doctrines of Epicurus; an Epicurean. [< F. Epicure, Epicurus, < L. Epicurus, < Gr. Epikouros.]

Ep'i-cu-re'an, 1 ep'i-kiu-ri'an; 2 ĕp'i-eū-rē'an (KIH), a. 1. Pertaining to the Greek philosopher Epicurus or to his doctrine that pleasure is the chief good. 2. [e-] Indulging, ministering, or pertaining to daintiness of appetite; given to the pleasures of the table.

Though a Norman was not gluttonous, he was epicurean.

Ep'i-cu-re'an, n. 1. A follower of Epicurus.

BAIN Mind and Body p. 157. [L. 1874.]

2. [e-] One addicted to pleasures of the senses, especially to eating and drinking; an epicure; gormand.

Ep'i-cu-re'an-ism, 1 ep'i-kiu-ri'an-izm; 2 ĕp'i-eū-rē'an-ism, n. 1. (1) The doctrine or spirit of the philosophy of Epicurus, who held that pleasure, or happiness, is the supreme good and chief end in life; true happiness, however, is found only in self-restraint, in correct living according to temperance, honor, and the dictates of conscience. The tenderness of the time, and the misconceptions and exaggerations of the disciples and successors of Epicurus, led to a form of doctrine and practise which brought the system into a discredit from which it has never quite recovered. (2) Any form of ethical doctrine which makes pleasure, or happiness, the summum bonum.

S. G. GOODRICH Recollections vol. ii. p. 245. [S. G. & CO. 1857.]

2. [e-] Indulgence of dainty appetites; luxurious living. ep'i-cure-ism†; ep'i-cur-ism‡.

Epicurism in books is much more difficult of attainment than epicurism in meat.

ep'i-cur-ize, 1 ep'i-kiūr-aiz; 2 ĕp'i-eūr-īz, vi. [-IZED; -IZING.] To become imbued with the Epicurean doctrines. 2. To live daintily and luxuriously, or like an epicure; indulge the appetites. ep'i-cure†.

ep'i-cu'ric'pen, 1 ep'i-kiū'rik'pen; 2 ĕp'i-eū'rĭc'pĕn, n. A current whose course is at the surface of the ocean.

Ep'i-cu'rus, 1 ep'i-kiū'rus; 2 ĕp'i-eū'rŭs, n. A Greek philosopher (341–270 B.C.); founder of the school called, after him, the Epicurean. See EPICUREAN.

ep'i-cy'an-hy'drin, 1 ep'i-sai'an-hai'drin; 2 ĕp'i-sī'ăn-hī'drin, n. Chem. A crystalline anhydrid ($C_6H_4O_3N$) of cyanhydrin, or di-derivative of naphthalene.

ep'i-cy'cle, 1 ep'i-sai'kl; 2 ĕp'i-sī'cl, n. 1. Anc. Astron. A circle whose center was conceived to move around the earth in a larger circle called the deferent, while a planet moved around its circumference. In the case of the outer planets the motion around the epicycle represents the apparent alternations of the direct and the retrograde motions due to the motion of the earth around the sun.

Epicycle train.

The wheel (A) is fixed, the wheel (B) rolling upon its circumference. The point (c) on B will describe epicycloids, as dcm. Hence, any point in the plane of B may be called an epicycloidal wheel.

To account for the observed motions of the moon and planets, Ptolemy adopted and extended the theory of epicycles.

R. ROUTLEDGE Popular Hist. Science p. 45. [R. & S. 1881.]

2. A circle that rolls upon the external or internal circumference of another circle.

ep'i-cy'cle, 1 ep'i-sik'lik; 2 ĕp'i-sī'clĭc, a. Relating to or of the nature of an epicycle. ep'i-cy'cli-cal.—epicyclic train (Mech.), a train of gear-wheels in which, in addition to the motions of the wheels about their respective axes, one has a fixed axis and the other has a motion of translation about it.

Epicycloids and Hypocycloids.

In the circle (C), rolling within the circle (A), the point (c) describes hypocycloids, as dcf. In the circle (B), rolling upon the circle (A), the point (b) describes epicycloids, as ghi.

ep'i-cy-cloi'dal, 1 ep'i-sai-kloi'dal; 2 ĕp'i-sī-clŏi'dal, a. Having the form or the properties of an epicycloid; also tracing an epicycloid.—epicycloidal teeth, teeth of a gear-wheel cut in the form of an arc of an epicycloid, as in the best present usage for most purposes.—e. wheel (Mech.), a toothed wheel gearing into and revolving outside the circumference and about the center of another wheel; generally stationary, of a considerably greater diameter, and converting rotary into reciprocal motion; one of many devices designed to improve upon the crank. Compare PLANET-GEAR. See illustration of EPICYCLIC TRAIN.

ep'i-cy-e'mate, 1 ep'i-sai-ĕ'mĕt; 2 ĕp'i-sī-ē'māt, a. Embryol. Having the embryo lying upon a large yolk enclosed by the blastodermic vesicle, as an anamniote or anallantoic vertebrate. [< EPI- + Gr. kyēma, embryo, < kyō, be pregnant.]

ep'i-cy-e'sis, 1 ep'i-sai-ĭ'sis; 2 ĕp'i-sī-ē'sĭs, n. 1. Med. Conception of a second fetus in a womb that is already impregnated; superfetation. 2. The condition of being epicyemate. [< EPI- + Gr. kyēsis, pregnancy, < kyō, be pregnant.]

ep'i-cys-tot'o-my, 1 ep'i-sis-tat'o-mi; 2 ĕp'i-ecŷs-tŏt'o-my, n. Surg. Suprapubic incision of the bladder.

ep'i-cyte, 1 ep'i-sait; 2 ĕp'i-cŷt, n. Biol. A cell's inclosing membrane.

Ep'i-dam'nos, 1 ep'i-dam'nes; 2 ĕp'i-dăm'nŏs, n. Same as DURAZZO.

Ep'i-dau'rus, 1 ep'i-dō'rus; 2 ĕp'i-daŷ'rŭs, n. A seaport village in Argos nome, Morea, Greece; an ancient state and great commercial city; 5 m. west was the temple of Æsculapius. Ep'i-dau'ro‡; E-pi'dau-rost [Gr.].

ep'i-dei'tic, 1 ep'i-daiit'ik; 2 ĕp'i-dīĭt'ic, a. Serving to explain, exhibit, or show forth; rhetorical; fitted for display; designed to make an impression; impressive.

The epideictic theory supposes evil needful in order to display some divine attribute.

C. F. HUDSON Debt and Grace p. 129. [R. & C. 1886.]

ep'i-de-is'tic, 1 ep'i-di-is'tik; 2 ĕ'pi-de-ĭs'tic, a. Characterized by religious spirit or aim. [< EPI- + DEISTIC.]

ep'i-dem'ic, 1 ep'i-dem'ik; 2 ĕp'i-dĕm'ic, a. Med. Spreading among the people; affecting a large number in a community at once, but of a limited period: distinguished from endemic; as, an epidemic disease. Compare ENDEMIC. [F. épidémique, < épidémie, < L. epidemus, < Gr. epidēmos, epidēmios, < epi, upon, + dēmos, people.]

ep'i-dem'ic, n. 1. Wide-spread occurrence of a disease in a certain region; hence, such occurrence of anything likened to disease; as, an epidemic of terror. 2. The thing that is epidemic. ep'i-dem'i-cal.

ep'i-dem'i-cal, 1 ep'i-dem'i-kal; 2 ĕp'i-dĕm'i-cal, a. 1. Epidemic. 2. Characterized by an epidemic; as, an epidemical season.—ep'i-dem'i-cal-ly, adv.— ep'i-dem'i-cal-ness, n.

ep'i-de-mic'i-ty, 1 ep'i-di-mis'i-ti; 2 ĕp'i-de-mĭc'i-ty, n. Med. The quality of being epidemic.

ep'i-de'mi-og'ra-phy, 1 ep'i-di'mi-og'ra-fi; 2 ĕp'i-dē'mi-ŏg'ra-fy, n. Med. A treatise or history relating to epidemics or to epidemic diseases. [< Gr. epidēmios (see EPIDEMIC) + -GRAPHY.] —ep'i-de'mi-o-graph'ist, n.

ep'i-de'mi-ol'o-gy, 1 ep'i-di'mi-ol'o-ji; 2 ĕp'i-dē'mi-ŏl'o-gy, n. Med. The science or doctrine of epidemics. [< Gr. epidēmios (see EPIDEMIC) + -LOGY.] —ep'i-de'mi-o-log'i-cal, a.—ep'i-de'mi-o-log'i-cal-ly, adv.—ep'i-de'mi-ol'o-gist, n. A student of epidemiology.

ep'i-den'dral, 1 ep'i-den'dral; 2 ĕp'i-dĕn'drăl, a. Bot. Growing upon much each of certain orchids. ep'i-den'dric.

Ep'i-den'drum, 1 ep'i-den'drum; 2 ĕp'i-dĕn'drŭm, n. Bot. 1. An immense genus of mainly tropical American epiphytic orchids of varying habit, frequently cultivated for their beautiful flowers. 2. [e-] A plant of this genus. [< EPI- + Gr. dendron, tree.]

ep'i-derm, 1 ep'i-dērm; 2 ĕp'i-dĕrm, n. [Rare]. The epidermis. ep'i-der'mas.

ep'i-der'mal, 1 ep'i-dēr'mal; 2 ĕp'i-dĕr'mal, a. Of, pertaining to, of the nature of, or derived from epidermis; cuticular; as, epidermal appendages: epidermal tissue. ep'i-der'mat‡.— ep'i-der'mous‡; ep'i-der'me-ous‡; ep'i-der'mous‡.

ep'i-der'ma-ta, 1 ep'i-dēr'me-ta; 2 ĕp'i-dĕr'ma-ta, n. pl. Med. Abnormal excrescences from the skin, as warts and corns. [< EPI- + Gr. derma, skin.]

ep'i-der'ma-toid, 1 ep'i-dēr'ma-toid; 2 ĕp'i-dĕr'ma-tŏid, a. 1. Epidermoid. 2. Epidermal. [< Gr. epidermatis, = epidermis (see EPIDERMIS), + -OID.]

ep'i-der'mic, 1 ep'i-dēr'mik; 2 ĕp'i-dĕr'mic, a. Covering the skin; like epidermis; epidermoid. ep'i-der'mi-cal or -mi-dal, — epidermic globes, same as EPITHELIAL PEARLS. See under PEARL.—e. inoculation, a method of administering medicine through the skin.— ep'i-der'mi-cal-ly, adv.

ep'i-der'mis, 1 ep'i-dēr'mis; 2 ĕp'i-dĕr'mis, n. Pharm. An ointment consisting of equal parts of white wax, gum arabic, glycerin, and water. [< EPIDERMIS.] ep'i-der'minet.

ep'i-der'mis, 1 ep'i-dēr'mus; 2 ĕp'i-dĕr'mis, n. 1. Anat. The thin non-sensitive and non-vascular layer of stratified epithelium that covers and protects the deep layers of the skin; the cuticle or outer skin. See illus. under SKIN. 2. Bot. The outermost layer of cells covering the surface of a plant when there are several layers of cells. Any integument or tegumentary covering; specif., the covering of the shell of a mollusk. [LL., < Gr. epidermis, < epi, upon, + derma; see DERM.] —ep'i-der'mi-za'tion, n.— Surg. Skingrafting.—ep'i-der'moid, a. Resembling epidermis. ep'i-der-moi'dal‡.— ep'i-der-moi'dy-sis, n. Separation of the epidermis from the deeper layers of the skin.—ep'i-der'mo-mus'cu-lar, a. Neuromuscular.—ep'i-der'mose. 1. a. Epidermal. ep'i-der'mous‡. II. n. Same as KERATIN.

ep'i-der-mo'ma, 1 ep'i-der-mō'ma; 2 ĕp'i-der-mō'ma, n. An abnormal outgrowth from the skin.

ep'i-der-mo'sis, 1 ep'i-der-mō'sis; 2 ĕp'i-der-mō'sĭs, n. Pathol. A diseased condition of the epidermis.

ep'i-di'a-scope, 1 ep'i-dai'a-skōp; 2 ĕp'i-dī'a-scōp, n. A magic-lantern made to reproduce objects of varying degrees of transparency. [< EPI- + Gr. dia, through, + -SCOPE.]

ep'i-dic'tic, ep'i-dic'ti-cal, a. See EPIDEICTIC.

ep'i-did'y-mec'to-my, 1 ep'i-did'i-mek'to-mi; 2 ĕp'i-dĭd'y-mĕc'to-my, n. Surg. An operation upon the epididymis.

ep"i-did'y-mis, 1 ep"i-did'i-mis; 2 ĕp"i-did'y-mĭs, n. Anat. An oblong body composed of the convoluted efferent duct of the testis, at the posterior part of that organ. [< Gr. epididymis, < epi, upon, + didymos, testicle; see DIDYMOUS.] — ep"i-did'y-mal, ep"i-did-dym'le, a. — ep"i-did"y-mit'is, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the epididymis.

ep"i-did'y-mite, 1 ep"i-did'i-mit; 2 ĕp"i-did'y-mīt, n. Chem. A silicate of glucinum and calcium (BeCa$_2$Si$_2$O$_8$), occurring in colorless twinned orthorhombic crystals of tabular habit; found in southern Greenland. It has the same composition as subdidymite, but differs from it in crystallization. [< Eng. + Gr. didymos, twin.]

ep"i-di'o-rite, 1 ep"i-dī'o-rit; 2 ĕp"i-dī'o-rīt, n. Petrol. A variety of diorite containing fibrous green hornblende which has been derived from the other compact hornblende or pyroxene. [< EPI- + DIORITE.]

ep"i-di"or-tho'sis, 1 ep"i-dī"ẽr-thō'sis; 2 ĕp"i-dī"ôr-thō'sis, n. [Gr.] Rhet. Same as EPANORTHOSIS.

e-pid'o-site, 1 e-pid'o-sit or -sīt; 2 e-pĭd'o-sīt or ĕp"i-dō'sīt, n. Petrol. A compact pale-green epidote-quartz rock. [< Gr. epidosis, giving besides, < epididomi, see EPIDOTE.] — e-pid'o-sy'ent.

ep"i-dote, 1 ep'i-dōt; 2 ĕp'i-dōt, n. Mineral. An aluminum calcium silicate ($HCa_2Al_3Si_3O_{13}$) with monoclinic crystallization, yellowish-green (pistachio) to black. It is also found granular and fibrous. The epidote group includes zoisite, epidote, clinozoisite, and allanite. [< Gr. epididomi, give besides, < epi, upon, + didomi, give.] — ep"i-dot'ic, a. — ep"i-do-til'er-ous, a. Yielding epidote.

ep"i-do'ti-za'tion, 1 ep"i-dō"ti-zā'shon; 2 ĕp"i-dō"tĭ-zā'shon, n. Geol. Metamorphic alteration into epidote.

ep"i-du'ral, 1 ep"i-dū'ral; 2 ĕp"i-dū'ral, a. Anat. Situated upon or around the dura mater; as, the epidural space.

ep"i-fa'cial, 1 ep"i-fā'shal; 2 ĕp"i-fā'shal, a. Selsmol. Of, pertaining to, or situated in a region verging the centrum of an earthquake.

ep"i-fol-lic"u-li'tis, 1 ep"i-fo-lik"yu-lī'tis or -lī'tis; 2 ĕp"i-fō-lĭc"yu-lī'tĭs or -lī'tĭs, n. Pathol. An inflammation of the hair-follicles, usually those of the scalp.

Ep"i-gæ'a, 1 ep"i-jē'a; 2 ĕp"i-jē'a, n. Bot. A genus of prostrate or trailing shrubby plants of the heath family (Ericaceæ), bristly with rusty hairs, having evergreen oblong reticulated leaves and axillary clusters of fragrant white or rose-colored flowers. One species, E. repens, is the trailing arbutus or Mayflower of the United States; the only other species, E. asiatica, is a native of Japan. [< Gr. epi'atos, < epi, upon, + gaia, earth.] Ep"i-gæ'al. — ep"i-gæ'al, ep"i-gæ'ous, a. Same as EPIGEAL, etc.

ep"i-gam'ic, 1 ep"i-gam'ik; 2 ĕp"i-găm'ĭc, a. Serving to attract or entice during the mating-season: specif., said of animal coloration.

The third head includes the colours displayed in courtship, which are therefore called Epigamic.
E. B. POULTON Colours of Animals ch. 17, p. 337. [A. 1890.]

ep"i-gas'ter, 1 ep"i-gas'tar; 2 ĕp"i-găs'tẽr, n. 1. The hindgut or posterior part of the peptogaster. 2. The epigastrium.

[< EPI- + Gr. gaster, belly.]

ep"i-gas'tral, 1 ep"i-gas'tral; 2 ĕp"i-găs'trăl, a. 1. Epigastric. 2. Of or pertaining to the epigaster.

ep"i-gas-tral'gi-a, 1 ep"i-gas-tral'ji-a; 2 ĕp"i-găs-trăl'jĭ-a, n. Mod. Pain at the epigastrium. [< Gr. epigastrion (see EPIGASTRIUM) + algos, pain.]

ep"i-gas'tric, 1 ep"i-gas'trik; 2 ĕp"i-găs'trĭc, a. 1. Anat. & Zool. Relating to the abdomen or the abdomen. Anat. Of or pertaining to the epigastrium or the abdomen generally. [< EPI- + Gr. gaster, stomach.] ep"i-gas'tric-al; ep"i-gas'tri-al. — epigastric fossa, the pit of the stomach. — e. plexus, same as SOLAR PLEXUS. — e. region, the epigastrium. See ABDOMINAL.

ep"i-gas'tri-o-cele, 1 ep"i-gas'tri-o-sēl; 2 ĕp"i-găs'trĭ-o-cēl, n. Surg. Hernia in the upper portion of the abdomen. [< Gr. epigastrion (see EPIGASTRIUM) + kēlē, tumor.] ep"i-gas'tro-cele.

ep"i-gas'tri-um, 1 ep"i-gas'tru-um; 2 ĕp"i-găs'trĭ-ŭm, n. [-TRI-a, pl.] 1. The upper part of the abdomen, especially the region over the stomach and its walls. See ABDOMINAL.

He waited a few minutes, until the wine had comforted his epigastrium. HORACE GREELEY Recollections Among a. 29ch. Tr. & r. 1867.]

2. Entom. The first entire ventral sclerite of the abdomen. [< Gr. epigastrion, < epi, upon, + gaster, stomach.]

ep"i-gas'tri-us, 1 ep"i-gas'tri-us; 2 ĕp"i-găs'trĭ-ŭs, n. [-I, 1 -ai; 2 -ī, pl.] Teratol. A monster with a parasitic twin attached to its epigastrium. [< Gr. epigastrios, over the belly.]

ep"i-gas'troid, 1 ep"i-gas'troid; 2 ĕp"i-găs'troid, a. Anat. Of or pertaining to the epigastrium. [< EPI- + Gr. gaster, stomach, + eidos, form.]

Ep"i-gæ'a, n. Same as EPIGÆA.

ep"i-ge'al, 1 ep"i-jī'al; 2 ĕp"i-jē'al, a. 1. Epigeous. 2. Entom. Keeping close to the ground, as insects that inhabit herbage. ep"i-gæ'al; [epigeios; see EPIGEOUS.]

ep"i-gee, 1 ep"i-jī; 2 ĕp"i-jē, n. Same as PERIGEE. [< Gr.

ep"i-gene, 1 ep"i-jīn; 2 ĕp"i-jēn, a. 1. Geol. Produced or occurring at the surface of the earth; as, epigene disintegration; epigene rocks: opposed to hypogene. ep"i-gen'ic. 2. Crystal. Pseudomorphous. [< EPI- + -GENE.]

ep"i-gen'e-sis, 1 ep"i-jen'i-sis; 2 ĕp"i-jĕn'e-sĭs, n. 1. Biol. (1) The theory that the organism is created by union of the fecundating principles of the male and the female, and that it does not preexist in ovum or spermatozoon. (2) The formation and differentiation of parts of an organism.

The organs of the embryo arise by new formation, or epigenesis, and not by mere enlargement out of a pre-existing invisible condition.
ADAM SEDGWICK in Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. ix, p. 324.

2. Pathol. The occurrence of an accessory symptom in a disease, but one that does not indicate a change in its nature. 3. Geol. Same as EPIGENESIS.] — ep"i-gen'e-sist, n. A believer in the theory of epigenesis. — ep"i-ge-net'ic, a. *Pertaining to epigenesis; specif., in geology, of or pertaining to a system of natural drainage originally established upon superior terranes, but by their complete degradation transferred to inferior terranes; superimposed; as, epigenetic valleys. — ep"i-ge-net'i-cal-ly, adv.

e-pig'e-nite, 1 e-pij'i-nit; 2 e-pĭj'e-nīt, n. Mineral. 1. A metallic steel-gray copper iron sulfarsenate, (Cu_2Fe)$_4As_2S_{13}$, crystallizing in the orthorhombic system. 2. A brownish-red decomposition product of tephrite. [< EPIGENE.]

e-pig'e-nous, 1 e-pij'i-nus; 2 e-pĭj'e-nŭs, a. Bot. Growing on the surface, especially the upper surface, as fungi on leaves.

ep"i-ge'ous, 1 ep"i-jī'us; 2 ĕp"i-jē'ŭs, a. Bot. 1. Growing on or above the ground's surface. 2. Rising above the ground after growth has started: said of cotyledons. [< Gr. epigeios, < epi, upon, + gaia, gaia, earth.] ep"i-ge'an.

ep"i-glau'ber-ite, 1 ep"i-glau'bẽr-it; 2 ĕp"i-glou'bẽr-īt, n. Mineral. A mono mineral that is closely related to struvite. [< EPI- + GLAUBERITE.]

ep"i-glot'tis, 1 ep"i-glot'is; 2 ĕp"i-glŏt'ĭs, n. [-TI-DES, 1 -i-dēz; 2 -ĭ-dēz, pl.] 1. Anat. The leaf-shaped cartilaginous lid, at the base of the tongue, that covers the larynx during the act of swallowing. It is attached by a narrow base to the anterior angle of the upper border of the thyroid cartilage (Adam's-apple) by the thyro-epiglottic ligament, to the posterior surface of the hyoid or tongue-bone by the hyo-epiglottic ligament, and to the sides and base of the tongue by the three glosso-epiglottic folds. See illus. under LARYNX. 2. Zoöl. (1) Holothurida. The epistoma of a polyzoan. (2) Entom. The epipharynx. He arrived on the banks of the river that surrounds the episcopal city of Durham.
JANE PORTER Scottish Chiefs, p. 496. [P. & C.]

[< LL. episcopalis, < episcopus; see BISHOP, n.]— Episcopal Church in Scotland, the Anglican Church in Scotland, which is in communion with, but not under the jurisdiction of, the Church of England. The bishops are the successors of those consecrated in England for the Scotch sees in 1661, after the Restoration, as the earlier Scotch Protestant Episcopate was then practically extinct. Episcopacy in Scotland was abolished by the First Book of Discipline, drawn up by the compilers of the reformed Confession of Faith and adopted by the Scottish Parliament of 1560, and again by the Second Book of Discipline, drawn up by Melville and sanctioned by the General Assembly in 1581. It was restored by King James in 1610, but was abolished once more in 1638 by a General Assembly reestablishing Presbyterianism. The Scotch Episcopalians took an active part in the attempt of 1715 to overthrow the Hanoverian dynasty, but did not openly participate in that of 1745. They were nevertheless made the subject of harsh measures by the Government and Episcopal worship practically ceased in Scotland until 1792, when they were freed from the penal laws, under certain restrictions, which were finally removed in 1864. The thirty-nine articles of the Church of England were adopted by the Scotch Episcopal Church in 1804 and the prayer-book in 1863. The Church has 7 bishops, 250 clergy, and about 25,000 communicants.—c. ring (it. C., Gr., & Anglican Chs.), a ring worn by a bishop as part of his insignia of office.— e-pis'co-pal-ly, adv.— Methodist E. Church, see under METHODISM.— Methodist E. Pathol.* A cancer-like lysin resulting from inoculation with epithelial cells and acting antagonistically toward them: V. Dungern's term.— ep"i-the'li-o-ma'ta, n. Proactive of epithelial destruction. Metchnikoff found that a serum of comminuted epithelium had this property when introduced into the circulatory system.— ep"i-the'li-o'ma, n. [-MA-TA, pl.] Pathol. AN epithelial cancer.— ep"i-the'li-o-mo'ma, n. — ep"i-the'li-o-mus'cu-lar, a. Of or pertaining to epithelium and muscle.— ep"i-the"li-o-tox'in, n. Physiol. Chem. A cytotoxin obtained from epithelium with epithelial cells, which acts as a toxin toward homologous cells.

Animal Epithelium, as: a, Pavement; b, ciliated; c, stratified; d, columnar; e, goblet; f, squamous.

ep"i-the'li-um, 1 ep"i-thi'li-um; 2 ep"i-thē'li-ŭm, n. [-LI-UMS, 1 -umz; 2 -ŭms, or -LI-A, pl.] 1. Anat. A cellular tissue covering all free surfaces of the animal body whether mucous, external, or serous, and functioning as the active structural element of the glands and other organs forming their coverings. The word was originally restricted in its meaning to the surface layer of cells in the mucous membranes, but now includes all tissues structurally similar to these. It consists of cells compactly set together and with such scanty intercellular material as to form a practically continuous coating or investment. It is both protective and secretive in its nature, developing keratin in the case of the cells covering the outer skin, which forms a horny layer impervious to water and, accidents, the absorption of deleterious substances, or the attacks of pathogenic bacteria, and elaborating such special protective devices as scales, feathers, nails, and hairs. In its secretive capacity it evolves the digestive ferments, manufactures milk, and absorbs certain of the digestive products, which it passes on, after metabolizing them, into the blood or lymph channels. It constitutes the most essential part of the sensory, alimentary, and excretory organs, and of the true glands, as the liver, and lines the respiratory and genitor-urinary tracts. All forms of epithelium undergo a constant reproductive change, the external layer of cells disintegrating and being replaced by the layers immediately beneath them. It is chiefly of embryonic origin, and varies, with the exception of the epithelium of the urinary and reproductive organs, which is mesoblastic. Epithelium in its various forms may be classified as follows: Squamous, (a) Simple, consisting of a single layer of flat cells, as in the lining of the air-spaces of the lungs. (b) Stratified, consisting of an upper layer of flat cells and several subsidiary layers of irregularly shaped cells, as in the skin and its openings. (2) Columnar. (a) Simple, consisting of a single layer of contiguous cells resting on a thin membrane, as in the alimentary tract. (b) Stratified, consisting of an upper layer of columnar and deeper layers of irregularly shaped cells, as in the nasal fosse. (3) Modified. (a) Ciliated, a form of cell occurring in columnar epithelium, and characterized with minute vibratile filaments. (b) Goblet, a type of cell occurring in columnar epithelium, in which the contents are discharged to the surface, as in the mouth and nose. (c) Pigmented, cells containing brown or black coloring-matter, found in the retina and skin, especially in the dark races. (4) Specialized. (a) Glandular, that form of epithelium which composes the glands of the body, as in the pancreas. (b) Neuro-epithelium, a specialized type forming the terminations of nerve-fibers, as in the rods and cones of the retina, the taste-buds, etc.

The term 'epithelia,' which has passed into 'epithelium,' was introduced by Ruysch to designate the cuticular covering on the red part of the lips. QUAIN Anat. vol. i. p. 194. [o. u. & co. 1891.]

2. Bot. The somewhat modified parenchyma lining certain intercellular cavities, the inner face of the secutellum of grasses, etc. 3. Ornith. The tough lining of the gizzard. [< EPI- + Gr. thēlē, nipple.] — ep"i-the'li-al, a.— epithelial pearl (Pathol.), a concentrically arranged mass of epithelial cells often seen in carcinomatous tumors.— ep"i-the'lі-ate, vt. To become covered with epithelium, as a wound when healing.— ep"i-the'li-oid, a. Like epithelium. ep"i-the'loid‡.— ep"i-the"li-za'tion, n. Biol. Change into epithelium.

ep'i-them, 1 ep'i-them; 2 ep'i-thēm, n. Med. Any external application except a salve or plaster, as a fomentation, poultice, or lotion. [< Gr. epithēma, < epitithēmi, < epi, on + tithēmi, put.] ep'i-theme†.

ep'i-the'ma, 1 ep'i-thi'mə, -thim; 2 ep'i-thē'ma, -thēm, n. ep'i-them.] 1. Bot. An aggregation of cells lying beneath the epidermal tissue, and forming an internal hydathode. 2. Ornith. [Rare.] A fleshy or horny excrescence on the beaks of birds. [< Gr. epithema; see EPITHEM.]

e-pith'e-sis, 1 i-pith'i-sis; 2 e-pith'e-sis, n. 1. Gram. The addition of an excrescent letter or a syllable at the end of a word without changing its meaning, as in amongst-i, whilst-i, etc.; paragoge. Compare EPENTHESIS; PROTHESIS. 2. Surg. The straightening of crooked limbs, as by splints or other mechanical appliances. [< Gr. epithesis, laying on, < epitithēmi; see EPITHEM.]

ep'i-thet, 1 ep'i-thet; 2 ep'i-thēt, n. 1. An adjective or a phrase or word used adjectively to describe some quality or attribute of its object, either good or bad, as in "a benevolent man," "a depraved wretch." The term is improperly and carelessly applied by many to nouns, as coward, thief, fool, villain, tho properly applicable to the adjectives only, cowardly, thievish, foolish, villainous.

Ep"i-thet'o-se'mi-dæ, 1 ep"i-thet'o-si'mi-di; 2 ep"i-thēt'o-sē'mi-dē, n. pl. Helminth. A family of spinuculaceans with cylindrical body and long non-retractile probosces. Ep"i-thet'o-so'ma, n. (s. f.) [< Gr. epithetos (see above) + sōma, body.] — ep"i-thet'o-so'mid, n.— so'moid, *a.

ep'i-thyme, 1 ep'i-thim; 2 ep'i-thīm, n. A troublesome European weed (Cuscuta epithymum), now naturalized in the United States. [< Gr. epithymon, plant parasitic on thyme.]

ep"i-thy-met'ic, 1 ep"i-thi-met'ik; 2 ep"i-thy-mēt'ic, a. Inclined to the indulgence of appetites sensual. [< Gr. epithymētikos, desiring, < epi, on, + thymos, mind.] ep"i-thu-met'ic; ep"i-thu-met'i-cal;.— ep"i-thy-met'i-cal-ly, adv.

ep"i-ti-me'sis, 1 ep"i-ti-mi'sis; 2 ep"i-tī-mē'sis, n. 1. Castigation; censure. 2. Rhet. Same as EPIPLEXIS. [LL., < Gr. epitimēsis, < epi, upon, + timē, value.]

ep"i-tith'e-des, 1 ep"i-tith'i-diz; 2 ep"i-tith'e-dēz, n. Arch. A molding of the Greco-Roman entablature; probably the cyma recta. [< Gr. epitithema; see EPITHEM.]

ep'i-toke, 1 ep'i-tōk; 2 ep'i-tōk, n. Helminth. The sexual organ of certain polychætous worms, as the palolo. [< EPI- + Gr. tokos, birth.] — e-pit'o-kal, a.

e-pit'o-me, 1 i-pit'o-mi; 2 e-pit'o-mē, n. 1. A concise statement of the main points of a work; abridgment; summary; abstract. 2. A brief and compact treatise; compendium. 3. A simplified representation, or one in miniature; as, Brussels is an epitome of Paris. [L., < Gr. epitomē, < epi, upon, + temnō, cut.] — epit'o-my†.

Syn.: see ABRIDGMENT.— e-pit'o-ma'tor, n. [Rare.] An epitomist.— e-pit'o-ma-to'ry, a.— ep"i-tom'ic, a. Of the nature of an epitome. ep"i-tom'i-cal;.— e-pit'o-mist, n. A maker of an epitome.

e-pit'o-mize, 1 i-pit'o-maiz; 2 e-pit'o-mīz, v. [-MIZED; -MIZING.] 1. To write or reduce to an epitome; make an abstract or brief outline of; summarize; condense; also, to make an imitation or representation of in brief or in miniature.

It was Paris epitomized.

AMELIA B. EDWARDS Barbara's History p. 243. [u. & BY.]

2†. To abbreviate by contraction or apocopation.

II. i. To prepare an epitome or summary.

Instead of . . . explaining and enforcing . . . I have thought it best to re-transcribe the whole of this Epistle.

FARMAR Early Days of Christianity p. 116. [c. r. D.]

Syn.: see ABBREVIATE.— e-pit'o-miz"er, n. — e-pit'o-miz"er, n. An epitomist. e-pit'o-mis"er‡.

ep"i-ton'ic, 1 ep"i-ton'ik; 2 ep"i-tŏn'ic, a. Overstrained. [< EPI- + Gr. teinō, stretch.]

ep"i-to'non, 1 ep"i-tō'ni-an; 2 ep"i-tō'ni-ŏn, n. [-NI-A, pl.] Anc. Gr. Mus. A tuning-wrench; pitch-pipe. [< Gr. epitonion, < epi, upon, + teinō, stretch.]

ep'i-tox'oid, 1 ep'i-toks'oid; 2 ep'i-tŏks'oid, n. A toxoid which has less affinity for the corresponding antitoxin than has the original toxin.

ep"i-tox'o-noid, 1 ep"i-toks'o-noid; 2 ep"i-tŏks'o-nŏid, n. A toxo-toxoid which has only the least affinity for the corresponding antitoxin.

ep"i-tra-che'li-on, 1 ep"i-tra-ki'li-on; 2 ep"i-tra-cē'li-on, n. Eccl. A stole worn by priests of the Greek Church.

ep"i-tra-pe'zi-on, 1 ep"i-tra-pi'zi-on; 2 ep"i-tra-pē'zi-ŏn, a. [Gr.] Literally, standing on the table: designating a statue of Hercules by Lysippus, which Alexander the Great once placed upon his table and which is one of the original works.

ep"i-trich'i-al, 1 ep"i-trik'i-əl; 2 ep"i-trīc'i-al, a. Lying over or upon the hairs.— epitrichial layer, a stratum of large cells forming the most superficial layer of the epidermis in the fetus of the third month.

ep"i-trich'i-um, 1 ep"i-trik'i-um; 2 ep"i-trīc'i-ŭm, n. An epithelial layer, in the embryos of some animals, lying upon the developing hairs. [< EPI- + Gr. trichion, dim. of thrix, trich-, hair.]

ep'i-trite, 1 ep'i-trait; 2 ep'i-trīt, n. Anc. Pros. A foot of three long syllables and one short. There are four forms (— ⏑ — —, — — ⏑ —, — — — ⏑, ⏑ — — —), called 1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th epitrite. [< LL. epitritus, < Gr. epitritos, containing one and one-third, < epi, upon, + tritos, third.] ep"i-trit'ic, — ep"i-trich'ic, a. Relating to or having the form of an epitrite.

ep"i-troch'le-a, 1 ep"i-trok'li-ə; 2 ep"i-trŏc'le-a, n. Anat. The bony prominence on the inner side of the humerus at its lower end; the inner condyle. [< EPI- + TROCHLEA.] — ep"i-troch'le-ar, a.

ep"i-tro'choid, 1 ep"i-trō'koid; 2 ep"i-trō'cŏid, n. Geom. A curve generated by the motion of a point in the plane of a moving circle which rolls upon the convex circumference of a fixed circle. [< EPI- + Gr. trochos, wheel, < trechō, run, + -OID.] — ep"i-tro-choi'dal, a.

e-pit'ro-pe, 1 i-pit'ro-pi; 2 e-pit'ro-pē, n. Rhet. 1. A figure ironically conceding the claim of an opponent with the intent to gain advantage thereby, as in "I admit the antiquity of the custom, but what of that?" 2. A declaration of willingness to throw oneself upon the justice or mercy of an audience, judge, or jury, as the assured of a favorable judgment. [Lit., < Gr. epitropá, reference, < epí, upon, + trepō, turn.] e-pit′ro-pỹ.

e-pit′ro-phy, ı. t-pĭt′ro-fi; 2 e-pĭt′ro-fy, n. Bot. The condition of having the pistil turned the under side: found in oblique or horizontal branches of some trees and shrubs; contrasted with hypotrophy.— ep′i-troph′ic, a.

e-pit′ro-pous, ı. p-pĭt′ro-pus; 2. e-pĭt′ro-pus, a. Bot. Having the nucle turned toward the placental axis in a hanging ovule and from it in an erect or ascending one: applied to anatropous ovules by Agardh: the reverse of atropous. See illus. under OVULE. [< Gr. epítropē, turn to, < epí, to, + trepō, turn.]

ep′i-tym-pan′ic, ı. ep′ı-tim-pan′ĭk; 2 ep′ĭ-tĭm-pān′ic. Ich. I. a. Upon or above the tympanum; hyomandibular. II. n. A hyomandibular bone.

ep′i-tym′pa-num, ı. ep′ı-tim′pa-num; 2 ep′ĭ-tĭm′pa-nŭm, n. Anat. The recess over the atrium of the tympanum.

ep′i-typh′lon, ı. ep′ı-tĭf′lon; 2 ep′ĭ-tĭf′lon, n. Med. The vermiform appendix. [< Epi- + Gr. typhlos, blind.]

— ep′i-ty-phil′tis, n. Same as APPENDICITIS.

ep′i-ver′te-bral, ı. ep′ı-vėr′te-bral; 2 ep′ĭ-vėr′te-bral, a. Situated upon a vertebra.

e-pix′y-ous, a. [Rare.] Bot. Growing on wood: said of certain fungi and other plants.

ep′i-zeux′is, ı. ep′ı-zīk′sĭs; 2 ep′ĭ-zīk′sĭs, n. 1. Rhet. That form of figurative repetition in which a word is repeated without any intervening words or clause, as in "he made a great discovery — a discovery the more creditable," etc. See REPETITION. 2. Anc. Pros. The union of two successive lesser Ionics, or Ionics a minore, with resultant change of quantity in the syllables that come together. [Lit., < Gr. epizeuxis, < epí, unto, + zeugnymi, join.]

Ep′i-zo′a, ı. ep′ı-zō′a; 2 ep′ĭ-zō′a, n. pl. Animals parasitic externally on others; especially, parasitic crustaceans, as fish-lice.

Epizoa—Animals which attach themselves to the surface of other animals, and feed on their juices or on their secretions. SPENCER Biology vol. i. pt. ii. p. 314. [A. 1873.]

— ep″i-zo′an. I. a. Epizoic. II. n. One of the Epizoa.— ep′i-zo′ic, a. 1. Living on the exterior of animals, as lice, etc. 2. Of or pertaining to the Epizoa. 3. Figuratively, parasitic. ep″i-zo′al.— ep″i-zo′i-cide, n. Med. Any drug destructive to parasitic animals.

ep″i-zo′nal, ı. ep′ı-zō′nal; 2 ep′ĭ-zō′nal, a. Cut by a zone. [C.]

ep′i-zo′on, ı. ep′ı-zō′on; 2 ep′ĭ-zō′ŏn, n. [zo′ı, pl.] One of the Epizoa. [< Gr. zōon, living thing, animal.]

ep″i-zo′o-ty, ı. ep′ı-zō-ō′tı; 2 ep′ĭ-zō-ō′tĭ, n. 1. Relating to or resembling epizooty. 2. Prevailing among animals. Compare EPIDEMIC. 3†. Containing remains of organisms. [< Gr. epi, upon, + zōon, animal.]

ep″i-zo′o-tĭc, ı. n. Any disease affecting animals ep″i-zo′o-ty, ǀ like an epidemic. 2. Specif., an influenza or distemper, especially among horses, that broke out in the United States in 1872.

e-plu′ri-gal, ı. t-plu′ı-gal; 2 e-plu′ı-gal, a. Descriptive of the upper of the two arm-segments in a division of echinoderms (Crinoidea) which form a syzygium by uniting transversely in a rigid suture. [< Epi- + Gr. syzygia, yoke.]

e-pli′cate, ı. t-plı′kĕt; 2 e-plī′cat, a. Bot. [Rare.] Not plicate. [< E+ PLICATE.] [DISPLEATED.

ep′lu′ŷe, ı. ĕp′lu′wē; 2 ĕp′lu′wē, n. [F.] Her. Same as e piu′ri-bus u′num, ı. ī pĭ′u-bus yū′num; 2 ē pĭ′u-bŭs yū′nŭm. [L.] From many, one: the motto of the United States of America, as being one nation, the compound of many states. The expression occurs originally in a Latin poem entitled Moretum (line 103), attributed to Vergil.

ep′och, ı. ep′ok; 2 ēp′oc (XIII), n. 1. A point in the onward course of time from which succeeding years are counted: always a point of time marked by an event of signal and lasting importance, or the event itself as marking the time of its occurrence and dating the beginning of an era. See era. 2. An interval of time or a series of years, regarded as a whole, memorable for extraordinary events and far-reaching results; any definite period of history; as, the epoch of the Reformation. 3. Geol. (a) The chronological subdivision of geologic history of the third order, especially as scheme adopted by the International Geological Congress, and by the U. S. Geological Survey, the corresponding stratigraphical subdivision being a series, and minor subdivision of geologic time, corresponding to a series, stage, group, or formation. This is the common textbook usage.

Epoch is a common term in geological literature, but it is used in a rather loose sense. Except for the Pleistocene or Glacial, and the Holocene or Recent epochs, the term is little used in the regular schemes of classification.

4. Astron. A moment of time when a varying quantity had a certain given value, or a moving body reaches a certain known position. 5. Math. See quotation.

When time is the independent variable in a simple harmonic function, the epoch is the interval which elapses from the era of reckoning till the function first acquires a maximum value. WM. THOMSON Math. and Phys. Papers vol. iii. art. exciii. p. 362. [n. d.]

[< LL. epocha, < Gr. epochḗ, check, < epí, upon, + echō, have.] ep′o-cha‡. SYN.: see AGE.— ep′och-mak″ing, a. Creating or marking an epoch.— ep′och-al, a. Pertaining to an epoch; epoch-making.— ep′och-lam, n. The practise of dividing time into epochs.— ep′och-ĭst, n. Specif., one who believes that the term translated "days" in Genesis signifies epochs.

ep′ode, ı. ep′ōd; 2 ēp′ōd, n. 1. The last of the three parts of an ancient lyric ode, following the strophe and antistrophe; an after-song. 2. A species of lyric poem introduced by Archilochus, in which a longer verse is followed by a shorter one; as, the epodes of Horace. 3. [Rare.] A solemn poem. 4. Mus. Specif., a refrain or burden. [OF., < L. epodos, < Gr. epōdos, < epí, upon, + aoidḗ, sing.] ep′od-ĭst.— ep-od′ic, a.

ep′o-ĭst, ı. ep′o-ĭst; 2 ēp′o-ĭst, n. [Rare.] A writer of epic poetry.

e-pol′ĭcate, ı. t-pol′ı-kĕt; 2 ē-pŏl′ı-cāt, a. Zool. 1. Without a thumb or pollex. 2. Having no hallux or hind toe; a peculiarity of certain birds. [< E- + POLLEX.]

ep″o-ma′ni-a, ı. ep′o-mā′nı-a; 2 ēp′o-mā′nĭ-a, n. A passion for the writing of epics; a mania for writing epics. [< EPIC + MANIA.]

ep″o-nych′i-um, ı. ep′o-nĭk′ı-um; 2 ēp′o-nĭk′ĭ-ŭm, n. 1. A hardened plate of epidermis formed before the nail upon the fingers of the fetus. 2. The fold of cuticle that overlies the edge of a nail. [< Epi- + Gr. onyx (onych-), nail.]

ep′o-nym, ı. ep′o-nĭm; 2 ēp′o-nĭm, n. 1. A personage, historical or mythical, assumed as the ancestor or founder and namegiver of a race, state, or city; also, the name of that personage.

So of Ion, Achæus, Æolus and many other names which, probably, have never been anything more than eponyms.

WINCHELL Preadamites p. 13. [a. c. a. 1890.]

2. A name or phrase formed from the name of a person to designate a people, place, or period, or an organ or part of the body, a scientific theory, etc. The following are examples: "Elizabethan era" from "Elizabeth;" "galvanism" from "Galvani." 3. Assyriol. A high official whose name was given to the year during which he held office. [< Gr. epōnymos, surnamed; see EPONYMOUS.] ep′o-nym″ĭc.— e-pon′y-mous‡.— ep′o-nym-can′on, n. The record that gives the succession of the eponymic people, etc.— ep″o-nym′ic, a. Pertaining to an eponym.— eponymic disease (Pathol.), any disease named after the person by whom it was either discovered or first correctly described.— e-pon′y-mous, a. — e-pon′y-mism, n. The practise of accounting for the names of places or peoples by reference to supposed prehistoric eponyms. [M.] — e-pon′y-mist, n. One from whom the name of a place or people is derived; an eponym.— epon′y-mize, it. To serve as eponym to. e-pon′y-mist.

e-pon′y-mos, ı. t-pon′ı-mos; 2 e-pŏn′ı-mŏs, n. In ancient Athens, the title of the first archon, who gave his name to the current year; applied also to the first ephor at Sparta, and to the Roman consuls. 2. An eponymic founder; eponym.

Each town had its founder or heroic Eponymos, whose name is born, and whose exploits shed a lustre on his descendants for ever. G. W. COX Gen. Hist. Greece bk. i. p. 16. [n. 1876.]

e-pon′y-my, ı. t-pon′ı-mı; 2 e-pŏn′ı-my, n. 1. The official dignity or prerogatives of an eponymos. 2. The year or period of office of an eponymos. 3. Eponymic nomenclature. e-pon′y-mism.

ep″o-oph′o-ron, ı. ep′o-nŏf′o-ron; 2 ēp′o-ŏf′o-rŏn, n. Anat. Tubular vestiges of the Wolffian body, found near the ovary; the parovarium. [< EPI- + Gr. ōophoros; see OOPHORA.]

ep″o-pee′, ı. ep′o-pē′; 2 ēp′o-pē′, n. An epic poem; epic poetry in general; a story or material suitable for an epic.

He was . . . engaged in a great work, which . . . was to be really the epopee of social history. DISRAELI Endymion vol. ii. p. 309. [r. 1880.]

[< F. épopée, < Gr. epopoiïa, epic poetry, < epos, epic, + poieō, make.] ep″o-pe′ist.— ep″o-pe′an, a. [Rare.] Belonging or suitable to an epic poet or to epic poetry.— ep″o-pe′ist, n. An epic poet.

E-pop′eus, ı. ı-pŏp′ūs or -pō-us; 2 e-pŏp′ūs or -pō-ŭs, n. Gr. Myth. A king of Sicyon, married to Antiope, the daughter of Nycteus, who fled to him for refuge.

ep′opt, ı. ep′opt; 2 ēp′ŏpt, n. Gr. Antiq. One of the initiated; one to whom all the secrets of any body of mysteries had been communicated.

He then underwent a lustration, after which he was introduced into the holy place, where he received the name of epopt. MACKAY Progr. of Freemasonry, Dionysian Mysteries p. 223. [ca. 1879.]

[< Gr. epoptḗs, < epí, on, + optos, visible.] ep-op′tat; ep-op′tes‡; ep-op′tĭst.— ep-op′tĭc, a. Of or pertaining to an epopt.

e-po′rose, ı. ı-pō′rōs; 2 ē-pō′rōs, a. Without pores; ep′os, ı. ep′os; 2 ēp′ŏs, n. 1. An epic poem; epic poetry.

Homer's Epos has not ceased to be true; yet it is no longer our Epos, but shines in the distance . . . like a receding star.

CARLYLE Sartor Resartus bk. iii. p. 176. [n.]

2. Unwritten narrative poetry celebrating heroic tradition; hence, in general, any series of stirring events fitted for epic treatment. 3. Anc. Pros. A dactylic hexameter. 4. Paleog. The dactylic hexameter adopted as the normal line or unit of measurement in estimating the length of manuscripts. [L., < Gr. epos, word.]

epp., abbr. Epistles.

Ep′ping, ı. ep′ı-ng; 2 ēp′ĭng, n. 1. A market-town in Essex, England. 2. A town in Rockingham county, N. H.

Ep′ping Forest. A forest in Essex, north of London, England; 60,000 acres, 5,600 of which have been purchased and thrown open as a public pleasure-ground by the Corporation of London. Waltham Abbey is about 2 miles to the west.

E-pro′bos-cid′e-a, ı. ı-prō′bo-sĭd′ı-a; 2 ē-prō′bŏ-cĭd′e-a, n. pl. Entom. An unimportant suborder of parasitic dipterids, which infest birds, bees, and mammals.

e″prou″vette′, ı. ē′pru″vet′; 2 ē′pru″vĕt′, n. [F.] [Rare.] Ordnance. An apparatus for determining the strength of powder. Specifically, (1) a small cannon, the range of which is the test; (2) a small vertical mortar discharging a ball which has attached to it a rod and ratchet, and shows the strength of a charge by the height to which the ball is thrown; or (3) a pistol with excessively short barrel, closed by a plate attached to a spring, the amount of extension of which measures the powder's strength. 2. Metal. A flux-iron or sample-spoon.

e-pru′ĭ-nose, ı. ı-prū′ı-nōs; 2 ē-prū′ĭ-nōs, a. [Rare.] Bot. Not prunose or frosted. [< E- + L. pruina, hour frost.]

ep′si-lon, ı. ep′sı-lon; 2 ĕp′sĭ-lŏn, n. The fifth letter and second vowel in the Greek alphabet [E, ε]: equivalent to English short e. As a numeral, its value is 5. See UPSILON. [< Gr. e psilon, < e, e, + psilon, neut. s. of psilos, simple.]

Ep′som, ı. ep′sam; 2 ēp′sŏm, n. A town in Surrey, England, famous for its race-course on Epsom Downs, 1½ miles from the town. Here horse-races were established in 1730. The Derby and Oaks races have taken place here since 1779 and 1780 respectively.

ep′som-ite, ı. ep′sam-ıt; 2 ēp′sŏm-ĭt, n. Mineral. A white, fibrous, transparent to translucent, bitter hydrous magnesium sulfate ($MgSO_4+7H_2O$). Crystallizes in the orthorhombic system, and sometimes found in botryoidal masses and fibrous crusts; a native Epsom salt. 2†. Geol. Soliltic: erroneous use. [< Epsom, in the sense of Epsom salt or salts.]

Epsom salt or salts. A white hydrated crystalline magnesium sulfate ($MgSO_4H_2O$), used as a purgative, also in dyeing. It was originally extracted from the waters of Epsom, England, but it is now chiefly made from the leucerite of the Stassfurt salt-beds.

Ep′ta-tret′ĭ-dæ, ı. ep′ta-tret′ı-dē; 2 ĕp′ta-trĕt′ĭ-dē, n. pl. Ich. Same as HEPTATRETIDÆ.

ep′u-la-ry, ı. ep′yu-lē-rı; 2 ĕp′yu-lā-ry, a. Of or pertaining to a feast or banquet. [< L. epularis, < epulum, feast, < epulæ, pl., feasting.— ep′u-lose†, a. Feasting to excess.— ep′u-los′i-ty†, n.

ep-u′lis, ı. ep-yū′lis; 2 ĕp-yu′lis, n. Pathol. Tumor of the gums, sometimes cancerous; gum-boil. [< Gr. epoulís, gum-boil, < epí, upon, + oulon, gum.] — -ĭt′ic, a.

ep-u′lo, ı. ep′yu-lō; 2 ĕp′yu-lō, n. [L.] EP′U-LO′NES, ı. -lō′nēz; 2 -lō′nēs, pl. Rom. Hist. A priest of the college of the tresviri or septemviri, founded in Rome 196 B. C., mainly to perform the rites of the sacrificial banquets.

ep′u-lo′sis, ı. ep′yu-lō′sĭs; 2 ĕp′yu-lō′sĭs, n. Med. Cicatrization. [< Gr. epoulōsis, < epí, upon, + oulos, whole.]

ep′u-lot′ĭc, ı. ep′yu-lot′ı-k; 2 ĕp′yu-lŏt′ĭ-c. I. a. Possessing power to cicatrize and heal. ep′u-lot′ĭ-cal‡. II. n. An application for cicatrizing.

e-pu′pil-late, ı. t-pū′pı-lĕt; 2 ē-pū′pĭ-lāt, a. Entom. Without a pupil or central dark part, as the ocellated spot. [< E- + L. pupilla; see PUPIL (of the eye).]

ep-u′ral, ı. ep-yū′ral; 2 ĕp-yu′ral. I. a. On the tail or on the upper side of it; as, an epural bone. II. n. An epural bone. [< EPI- + Gr. oura, tail.] ep″i-u′ral‡.

ep′u-rate, ı. ep′yu-rĕt; 2 ĕp′yu-rāt, n. [Rare.] To make pure; purify.— ep″u-ra′tion, n.

ep′u-ra′te′, ı. ĕ′p′yū-rā′te′; 2 ē′p′ur-a. n. [F.] Arch. A full-sized detailed plan of an architectural member or detail, or of some other feature.

Ep′worth, ı. ep′warth; 2 ĕp′worth, n. A town in Lincolnshire, England. It was the birthplace of John Wesley, whence the name of the Epworth League.

e′py-or′nis, ı. ı′pı-ōr′nıs; 2 ē′pĭ-ôr′nĭs, n. An ostrich-like bird of the genus Æpyornis, whose eggs, subfossil in Madagascar, are a foot long and 9 inches in diameter. 2. [E-] Ornith. The genus Æpyornis. [< Gr. atpys, tall, + ornis, bird.] e″pi-or′nĭs‡.

e′qua-bil′i-ty, ı. ī′kwa-[or ek″wa-]bĭl′ı-ty; 2 ē″kwa-[or ĕk″wa-]bĭl′ĭ-ty, n. 1. The state or quality of being equable; uniformity or evenness, as of temper, state, or action; continuous equality; equableness; as, equability of movement or of soul.

His remainder of equability departed.

MARGARET BENSHAM'S Career p. 350. [n. mass.]

2. [Archaic.] Comparability on equal terms. 3†. Wellbalanced or normal condition. [< L. æquabilĭtāt-is, < æquabilis; see EQUABLE.]

e′qua-bl(e′s, ı. ī′kwa-bl or ek″wa-bl (ZH), a. 1. Of uniform condition or movement at all times; invariable, or varying but little; even; steady; as, an equable temperature. 2. Of equal or constant range, proportion, extent, or operation; free from inequalities or irregularities; as, an equable system of taxation; an equable gait. 3†. Equitable. [< L. æquabilis, < æquo; see EQUATE, v.] æ′qua-ble†.— e′qua-ble-ness′, n. The state or quality of being equable; equability.

e-qua′val, ı. ı-kwī′val; 2 ē-kwā′val, a. Belonging to the same period; of equal age. [< L. æquus, equal, + ævum, age.]

e′qual, ı. ī′kwal; 2 ē′kwal, n. [E'QUALLED, E'QUALLING, E'QUALS; E'QUALING OR E'QUALLING.] I. t. To be or become equal to; rise to the same level or degree with; as, he was too feeble to equal his companions. 2. To meet adequately; fulfil the requirements of; as, his ability equaled his opportunity. 3. To make equal; bring to the same place or state; count as equal; equalize.

From Egypt marching, equall'd with one stroke, Both her first-born and all her realm beside.
MILTON P. L. bk. i. l. 488.

4. To make equal return for or recompense in full; as, who answered all her cares and equalled all her love."

III. i. To be equal; match.

e′qual, a. 1. Of the same degree with another, or with each other, as in magnitude, value, amount, or power; neither greater nor less; as, two men of equal worth.

In the usage of most languages the terms are regarded as equal only when they can be superposed. Compare EQUIVALENT.

Three angles of a triangle insist on being equal to two right angles. HOLMES Poet at Breakfast-Table p. 88. [n. s. a. c. 1.]

2. Uniform in condition or action; not changeable; even; equable; as, an equal temperature. 3. Sufficient in power or quantity; adequate for the purpose; as, he was equal to the emergency.

The cheering voice of his [Capt. John Smith's] resolute will made him equal to his duty.

BANCROFT United States vol. i. p. 128. [n. s. a. c. 1850.]

SYN.: see ADEQUATE; ALIKE.— Prep.: to. Equal with is rare in modern use.— e′qual-a′qual, a. [Scot.] Just alike.

e′qual-ended, a. Having both ends alike, so that point and butt can not be distinguished: said of eggs.— e.-falling, a. Falling with equal velocities.— e. voices (Mus.), a number of voices of either men or women only.— identically e. (Math.), the same in every respect except situation or method of designation.

e′qual, n. 1. A person or thing equal to another; specif., a match of the same rank or condition. 2†. Equality.

e′qual-i-flo′rous, ı. ī′kwal-ı-flō′rus; 2 ē′kwal-ĭ-flō′rŭs, a. Bot. Having all the flowers of the same head or cluster alike both in form and in character. [< L. æquus, even (see EQUAL) + flos (flor-), flower.]

e′qual-ist, ı. ī′kwal-ıst; 2 ē′kwal-ĭst, n. One who attributes equality to certain persons or things indicated.

e-qual′i-ta′ri-an, ı. ı-kwol′ı-tā′rı-an; 2 ē-kwŏl′ĭ-tā′rĭ-an. I. a. Of or pertaining to the doctrine of the equality of the human race. II. n. A believer in this doctrine.

e-qual′i-ty, ı. ı-kwol′ı-tı; 2 ē-kwŏl′ĭ-ty, n. [-TIES, ı. -tız; 2 -tĭs, pl.] 1. The state or quality of being equal, as in amount, value, or rank; the state of being of the same quality or degree; as, equality of weight, of worth, of knowledge, of right.

Equality improves manners, for it strengthens the basis of all good manners, respect for other men and women simply as men and women.

BAYNE Am. Commonwealth vol. ii. p. 662. [MACM. 1889.]

2. Uniformity of state or action; equability. 3. Justice; impartiality. 4. The condition of being flat or level; plainness; evenness; as, the equality of a surface. 5. Math. The relation between two quantities of the same amount or value: indicated by the symbol =. 6. [Rare.] Sufficiency; adequateness. [< OF. equalité, < L.

Key 1: aisle; au = out; oil; ū = feud; ch in; go; j et; ŋ = sing; s o; sh ip; th in, this; agure; F. boń, dūne; ʀ = loch. †, obsolete; ‡, variant.
Key 2: bo͝ok, bo͞ot; full, rule, cūre, bŭt, bûrn; dŭ, bo͝oy; e = ĕ; ę = s; ġo, ġem; iŋk; ş = z; thin, this; F. boń, dūne; ʀ = loch.

æqualita(t-)s, < æqualis; see EQUAL.] e-qual'i-tet.— confessional equality (Law), the equality of persons professing different religious beliefs.—e. clause (Engl. Law), a provision "that the power of varying tolls should not be used for the purpose of prejudicing or favoring particular parties, or for the purpose of collusively and unfairly creating a monopoly in the hands of the company or of particular parties." Railway Clauses Consolidation Act (8 & 9 Victoria, c. 20, § 90), 1845.

e'qual-i-sa'tion, j shon, n. The act of equalizing, or the state of being equalized.

e'qual-ize, 1 ĭ'kwal-aiz; 2 ē'kwal-iz, vt. [-IZED; -IZ'ING.]

e'qual-ise, j i. To make equal to another or to one another, as in amount, condition, or degree; make alike; render uniform; match; as, to equalize burdens of taxation. 2. Mech. To set (steam-engine valves) so as to render cut-off or some other function the same at both ends of the stroke. 3. To become or be equal to; represent as equal; equal. e'qual-ized.

e'qual-i-za'tion, 1 ĭ-kwal-ĭ-zā'shan; 2 ē'kwal-ĭ-zā'-. Syn.: see BALANCE. — e'qual-iz'ing-bar', n. A bar for equalizing or balancing strain. Specif.: (a) A lever in a locomotive running-gear or on a passenger-car truck, serving to distribute or divide the load on the wheels on one side of the engine or car. (2) An arrangement of whippletrees to distribute the stress of pull equally upon three horses abreast.— equalizing-connection, n. Elec. A resistance-coil, or the like, placed in a circuit to regulate the difference of potential.— equalizing-current, n. Elec. The current that passed through an equalizer.— equalizing-gear, n. Mech. A form of spur-wheel gear used for varying the speed of wheels on traction- and fire-engines when making sharp turns.— equalizing-machine, n. A machine used in wood-working for sawing off the ends of spokes, hub-blanks, etc., in order to render them of equal length. equalizing-saw.— equalizing-pipe, n. Ordnance. A pipe regulating the flow of oil between the recoil-cylinders of coast-artillery gun-carriages so as to secure the quantity in each equal, thereby equalizing the resistance.

e'qual-iz'er, 1 ĭ'kwal-aiz'ar; 2 ē'kwal-iz'er, n. 1. One e'qual-is'er, j who or that which equalizes or renders uniform. e'qual-ier; Rare]. 2. Specif., a device to equalize the application of power or the pressure of weight in cars, wagons, etc.; as, an equalizer for a breaking-plow. 3. Elec. A connecting conductor of low resistance used to join the current-generators and equalize their voltage; any contrivance for equalizing the pull of electromagnets. 4. A receptacle loosely filled as with sand, sawdust, through which producer-gas is passed to insure uniformity of quality. 5. Aero. An apparatus for securing lateral stability.

e'qual-ly, 1 ĭ'kwal-ĭ; 2 ē'kwal-y, adv. 1. To the same amount or in the same degree with another; as, equally exalted; equally endowed. 2. In equal parts or shares; as, the proceeds were equally divided. 3. With justice and fairness; impartially; equitably.

In phrases like equally as, equally as well, equally as great, the as is redundant and should be omitted.

e'qual-ness, 1 ĭ'kwal-nes; 2 ē'kwal-nĕs, n. 1. The state or quality of being equal, as in size, number, etc.; equality. 2†. Uniformity. 3†. Evenness.

e-qua'nar-lar, 1 ĭ-kwan'gu-lar; 2 ē-kwāŋ'gū-lar, a. Equiangular.

e'qua-nim'i-ty, 1 ĭ'kwa-nim'ĭ-ti; 2 ē'kwa-nĭm'ĭ-ty, n. 1. Evenness of mind or temper; composure of spirit; especially, calm steadiness amid trying circumstances; as, to bear losses with equanimity.

It is rare indeed that the philosophy of a dignified Indian is so far disturbed, as to destroy the appearance of equanimity.
COOPER Wept of Wish-ton-wish p. 371. [W. & v. 1860.]

2†. Fairness of mind; impartiality. [< L. æquanimita(t-)s, < æquus, equal, + animus, mind.] e-quan'i-mous-ness†.— e-quan'i-mous, a. Of an even state of mind or temper.— e-quan'i-mous-ly, adv.

e'quant, 1 ĭ'kwant; 2 ē'kwant, a. [Archaic.] 1. Having equal arcs described in equal times. 2. Equating.

e'quant, n. In ancient astronomy, an eccentric circle around which a planet or the center of an epicycle was conceived to move uniformly. eccentric equator‡. [< L. æquant-(e)s, ppr. of æquo; see EQUATE.]

e-quate', 1 ĭ-kwēt'; 2 ē-kwāt', vt. [E-QUAT'ED; E-QUAT'ING.] 1. To regard or represent as equivalent, or to indicate equality between; express as an equation.

But having given a numerical equation equated to zero, it is a matter of exceeding difficulty to discover all the roots.
W. S. JEVONS Prin. of Science bk. i, p. 123. IMACM. 1879.]

2. To make equal or uniform, or to reduce to an average; as, to equate lines.

Civilization will certainly have ever new demands in order to equate its ever changing conditions.
T. B. WAKEMAN in The Arena Oct. 1891, p. 601.

3. [Rare.] To be equal to; equal. [< L. æquatus, pp. of æquo, make equal, < æquus, equal.] — equating for curves, in railroad engineering, the increase of the measured distance to allow for curvature of track. — equating for grades, the adding of a certain amount (as one mile for every 20 feet of ascent) to the measured distance, to allow for additional work necessitated by differences of level.

e'quate, 1 ĭ'kwēt; 2 ē'kwāt, a. Entom. Smooth.

e-qua'tion, 1 ĭ-kwē'shan; 2 ē-kwā'shon, n. 1. The process or act of making equal; equal division; equality. 2. Math. A proposition expressing, usually by the symbol =, the equality of two quantities. An algebraic equation is one expressible by equating to zero an entire function of the unknown quantity, and so of the general form $ax^n + bx^{n-1} \ldots + hx^2 + tx + k = 0$. 3. Astron. The correction or quantity added to or deducted from the mean position of any heavenly body, to obtain its true position; a correction due to any variable cause. 4. Chem. An expression of chemical representation of a chemical reaction, as $Na_2CO_3 + H_2SO_4 = Na_2SO_4 + CO_2 + H_2O$. The first member includes the substances reacting; the second, the products. The sum of the quantities of the two members must be equal. 5. Logic. A formal expression of the hypothetical identicalness of two expressions; in symbolic logic, the expression, in form similar to an algebraic equation, of a proposition or of the connection between propositions. 6. Polit. Econ. The operation of making two distinct variables equal to each other, as in the equation of demand and supply. See EQUATION OF DEMAND AND SUPPLY, below. [< L. æquatio(n-), < æquo; see EQUATE, v.] — Abelian equation, an equation all of whose roots are rational functions of one or more of the roots.— absolute e., in ancient astronomy, the sum of the eccentric and optical equations, that is of the apparent and real irregularities of the motion of a planet.— adfected e., a quadratic equation in which all three terms are present.— annual e. (Astron.), variation in the moon's motion resulting from the inequality of the velocity of the earth due to the eccentricity of its orbit.— Bessel's e. (Math.), the equation $x^2 \frac{d^2y}{dx^2} + x\frac{dy}{dx} = (n^2 - x^2)y$ whence, by solution, are obtained Bessel's functions, of prime importance in physics.— brightness e. (Psychol. Optics), the matching, or equating, of two visual impressions with respect to their subjective brightness.— characteristic e. (Math.), an algebraic equation, each of whose roots determines the solution of a given differential equation.— circulating e. (Math.), a difference equation of which the coefficients take successive forms at a cycle for successive values of the variable.— complete e., an equation containing all the integral powers of the unknown quantity up to the highest that enters into it.— connected equations (Math.), a series of equations, of which one may be deduced from the others.— consistent equations, same as SIMULTANEOUS EQUATIONS. — constitutive e. (Math.), the equation of a locus; also, any equation defining a mathematical concept.— cubic e., an equation of the third degree.— cyclotomic e., an equation pertaining to the subdivision of the perigon, as, where n is prime ($\alpha^n - 1$) ($\alpha - 1$) = 0.— derived e., one formed by equating to zero the derivative of an equation as to the unknown quantity.— determinate e. (Math.), one of a set of as many equations as there are unknown quantities involved.— differential e., one that contains differentials or derivatives of variable quantities.— dimensional e. (Physics), an equation which shows how the process of the extraction of the fundamental units of any system of physical measurements enter into a derived unit.— e. of the (Biol.), homeokinesis.— e. of acceleration (Math.), the equation stating that the acceleration of a body is equal to the force propelling it divided by its mass.— e. of achromaticity, an equation in which the principles of a combination of lenses are so adjusted as to result in achromatization.— e. of a curve, one giving a relation between the coordinates of every point on the curve.— e. of condition, one that expresses a relation between quantities that enter into it.— e. of demand and supply, an equation where, within the limits of a particular market, competition so adjusts the price that demand and supply are equally balanced.— e. of elasticity, an equation indicating the relations of elastic pressure, volume, density, and temperature, in the ideal gas.— e. of energy, an equation into which enter the kinetic energy and the potential energy of a system, indicating that the sum of these energies remains constant.— e. of equilibrium, an equation indicating the conditions under which the individual portions of a dynamic system will remain quiescent.— e. of equinoxes, the difference between the tropical and apparent places of the equinox.— e. of force (Math.), a dimensional equation stating that force is proportional to the product of mass and length divided by the square of time.— e. of light, the time required for the light from a heavenly body to reach the earth. — e. of payments, the determination of the time at which several sums of money, due at various times, should be due, if all are paid at once.— e. of state, an equation which represents the change of condition of a homogeneous liquid or gas as a function of the pressure, the volume, and the temperature.— e. of the center, the difference between the mean and true anomaly of a planet or satellite, due to the eccentricity of its orbit.— e. of time, the difference between mean and apparent time.— e. time, a timepiece showing the difference between mean and apparent solar time. — equations of motion (Dynamics), differential equations expressing the motion of a system in terms of the applied forces, such as the equation of acceleration. See above.— equivalent equations, equations in which all the roots of either are also roots of the other.— Eulerian e. (Math.), 1. The equation expressing the addition theorem of elliptic integrals. 2. Any one of the usual equations of hydrodynamics in which the components of the velocity at fixed points in space are taken as variables: opposed to Lagrange's equation, in which the coordinates of a definite particle are taken as variables.— exact differential e., an equation in which an exact differential is represented as equal to zero.— exponential e., one in which the unknown quantity enters into an exponent.— formulate e., an equation representing relations between operations rather than quantities; as, $a(b+c) = ab+ac$, which expresses the fact that multiplication is distributive.— fractional e., an equation in which the unknown is a denominator.— Fuchsian e. (Math.), an equation that is regular for infinite values of z and at all finite singularities. See REGULAR, 13.— gas e., an equation stating that the temperature of a gas is proportional to the product of its volume and pressure.— Gauss's e., $x(1-x)\frac{dy}{dx} + \left\{\alpha - (\alpha+b+1)x\right\}\frac{dy}{dx} - aby = 0$, where a, b, c are constants and x is the independent variable.— general e., one of the coefficients of all whose terms are algebraical quantities independent of each other.— homogeneous e., one in which all the terms are of the same degree in the unknown quantities.— identical e., one true for all values of the quantities it contains, as $x + y = y + x$. — incompatible equations, equations which have no identical solution; as, $a + b = 4$ and $2a + 2b = 9$.— inconsistent equations‡.— incomplete e., one some of whose terms are wanting.— indeterminate e., an equation that may be satisfied by any one of an infinite number of values, as in the case where it has more than one unknown quantity; similarly, a group of equations is indeterminate when it has more unknown quantities than the number of equations in the group.— integral e., an equation whose terms are integral so far as concerns the unknown quantity; also, an equation containing no differentials.— irrationale., an equation composed partly of an indicated root of an unknown.— irreducible e., one none of whose roots is the root of an equation of a lower degree with rational coefficients.— Lagrange's e., the equation $\frac{d\,x}{P} = \frac{d\,y}{Q} = \frac{d\,z}{R}$ where P, Q, R, are functions of x, y, z.— Laplace's e., the equation $\frac{d^2u}{dx^2} + \frac{d^2u}{dy^2} + \frac{d^2u}{dz^2} = 0$, most valuable in physics.— Laplace's spherical harmonic e., same as LAPLACE'S EQUATION.— linear e., one each of whose terms is of the first degree in the unknown quantities, as $ax + by + cz = 0$.— metacyclic e., an equation solvable by the solution of a series of cyclic equations.— modular e., a relation between certain moduli of elliptic functions.— normal equations, equations that determine the value of the unknown quantities in applying the method of least squares.— numerical e., one all of whose coefficients, the constant term included, are numbers.— octic e., an equation of the eighth degree.— ordinary differential e., one containing the differential of only a single independent variable.— parallactic e. (Astron.), the slight inequality in the orbital motion or perturbations of the moon, caused by the sun's action, which is employed in calculating the sun's parallax.— parametric e. (Math.), any one of a set of equations each of which expresses one of a group of connected variables as a function of certain independent variables or parameters.— partial differential e., one containing the derivatives of functions as to several independent variables.— perpetual e., any error common to all the observations made by some one person; commonly, the constant error he makes in estimating the moment of a transit of a near across a thread in his telescope.— primitive of a differential e., an integral equation which satisfies a differential equation.— prime e. (Math.), an equation of the first degree.— quadratic e., one of the unknown quantity; as, $x^2 = 27$ is a pure cubic equation. — radical e., same as IRRATIONAL EQUATION.— reciprocal e., one that remains unchanged when the unknown quantity is changed to its reciprocal and the necessary reduction made.— reflection equations (Optics), equations which are used to connect the phase and intensity of a reflected ray from the angle of incidence and the ratio of the sine of the angle of incidence to that of the angle of refraction of a reflecting surface.— resolvent e., one whose roots are such entire functions of the roots of another that the latter roots can be rationally expressed in terms of the former.— simultaneous equations, two or more equations in which the unknown quantities have the same values.— symbolic e., one in which a single symbol equated to 0 represents the equation of a curve or surface.— symmetric e., an equation which retains its form when any two of the unknowns are interchanged.— theory of equations, the branch of algebra dealing with those functions of the roots of an equation that may be expressed rationally in terms of its coefficients and with certain irrationals termed the adjuncts of the equation.— tidal equations, equations necessary to the theory of the tides.

e-qua'tion-al, 1 ĭ-kwē'shan-al; 2 e-kwā'shon-al, a. 1. Belonging to or implying the use of equations. 2. Mech. Equaling; adjusting; equivalent to differential as applied to gearing, etc.— equational box, differential gearing in spinning-machines for regulating the twist of the yarn: usually enclosed in a box. e-qua'tion-box'†.— e-qua'tion-al-ly, adv. In an equational manner; by the use of equations.

e-qua'tion-ism, 1 ĭ-kwē'shan-izm; 2 e-kwā'shon-izm, n. Philos. The doctrine that the strength of one's belief can be made to correspond exactly with the extent of proof.
— e-qua'tion-ist, n. An advocate of equationism.

e-qua'tor, 1 ĭ-kwē'tar or -ter; 2 e-kwā'tor, n. 1. The circle in which that plane which passes through the center of the earth, sun, a planet, or other rotating body, perpendicular to the axis of rotation, cuts the surface of the body, called, in the case of the earth, the terrestrial equator. From this line latitudes are reckoned, the latitude of the equator itself being 0°. 2. The great circle in which the plane of the earth's equator cuts the celestial sphere. celestial equator‡. 3. A circle passing around any spheroid of revolution in the plane through its equator, at right angles to its axis. 4. Any similar circle that divides the surface of a body into two equal parts. [< LL. æquator, < L. æquo; see EQUATE, v.] æ-qua'tor'i.— equator of a magnet, the line midway between the poles of a magnet, the neutral line where the attraction is equal.— e. of heat, same as THERMAL EQUATOR.— e. of the heavens, same as EQUATOR, 2.— e. of the sun, the solar circle perpendicular to its axis of revolution. e. of a planet; — hydrometeoric e. (Meteor.), the dividing line between those districts which have the same general conditions of the northern winter and those subject to the conditions of the southern summer, or vice versa.— magnetic e., an irregular, unstable line on the earth's surface, encircling it nearly midway between the magnetic poles, where a free magnetic needle has no tendency to dip. It coincides nearly with the geographical or terrestrial equator.— thermal e., the belt which passes through places of greatest heat on the surface of the earth.

e'qua-to'ri-al, 1 ĭ'kwa-tō'ri-al; 2 ē'kwa-tō'ri-al, a. Relating to, near, or determined by an equator, applied especially to the terrestrial equator. [< LL. æquator; see EQUATOR.] e'qua-to're-al.

— equatorial acceleration of the sun, the lessening of the rotation period for points on the equator of the sun as compared with the period at points in higher latitudes.— e. telescope, a telescope turning on two axes at right angles to each other, the principal axis, known as the polar axis, being parallel to the axis of the earth, the object of the arrangement being to keep any point constantly in the field, notwithstanding the earth's rotation. The polar axial axis carries a circle by which the right ascension of a heavenly body may be measured, while the polar axis carries a declination circle. By means of the two axes any point above the horizon may be covered. The largest telescopes are usually mounted in this manner, the motion in the right ascension being usually controlled by clockwork so that the object may be kept stationary in the field of view.— e'qua-to'ri-al-ly, adv. In a line with the equator; in an equatorial direction.

e'qua-to'ri-al, n. An equatorial telescope. See EQUATORIAL, a. e'qua-to're-al‡.

R. A. PROCTOR Great Pyramid p. 152. [N. & w. 1883.]

— English equatorial (Astron.), an equatorial having the declination axis attached to the polaxis between its bearings.— e. coudé [F.], literally, an elbowed equatorial; an equatorial telescope so arranged that the observer looks along the line of the axis on which it turns, and theretore need not change his position when the instrument is pointed in different directions.—twin e., two telescopes of different sizes mounted in such a manner that their work may be compared.—universal e., an equatorial the drawing-clock and mounting of which can be adjusted to suit any latitude.

ér'querre', 1 ĕ'kwr; 2 ĕ'kwr, n. [F.] Her. A small square marked off at the corner of a shield by an ellow of different coloring.

eq'uer-ry, 1 ĕk'wər-ı or ı-kwe'rı; 2 ĕk'wer-y or e-kwĕr'y (XIII), n. [<RIDE, 1 -IE; 2 -IE, pl.] 1. An officer having charge of the horses of a prince or nobleman; at the English court, an officer in the department of the Master of the Horse.

Wherever he went . . . he was accompanied by his equerry.
VICTORIA Prince Consort p. 280. (r. 1867.]

2. The stables of a prince or noble, or the officers and men in charge of them. [< F. écurie, stable, < LL. scuria, < OHG. scûra, shed.] eq'uer-ÿ‡; quer'ÿ†.—eq'uer-ry-ship, n.

e'ques, 1 ē'kwēz; 2 ē'kwēs, n. One of the equites.

e-ques'tri-an, 1 ı-kwes'trı-ən; 2 e-kwĕs'trı-an, a. 1. Of or pertaining to horses or horsemanship; performed with or on horses; as, equestrian games or exhibitions.

Of all theatrical entertainments, the equestrian drama is perhaps the most absurd.
J. JEFFERSON in Cent. Mag. Jan., 1890, p. 370.

2. Practised in or given to horsemanship.

Scott was both a pedestrian and an equestrian traveller, having often, as he tells us, walked thirty miles, or ridden a hundred.
HAMERTON Intell. Life pt. 1, letter v, p. 20. (n. pubs. 1874.]

3. Representing one on horseback. 4. Composed of Roman equites or knights. [< L. equester (equestr-), < equus, horse.] e-ques'tri-al†.

e-ques'tri-an, n. A rider on horseback; one given to or skilled in horsemanship.

e-ques'tri-an-ism, 1 ı-kwes'trı-ən-ızm; 2 e-kwĕs'trı-an-ızm, n. Horsemanship, or the practice of riding on horseback.

e-ques'tri-enne', 1 ı-kwes'trı-en'; 2 e-kwĕs'trı-ĕn', n. A woman skilled in the riding of horses; a horsewoman.

Ér'queur'dre-ville', 1 ĕ'kŭr'dre-vil'; 2 ĕ'kŭr'dre-vil', n. A city in Manche department, France.

e'qui-, 1 ē'kwı-; 2 ē'kwı-. From Latin æquus, equal: a combining form. = e'qui-al'chor-ate, a. Spong. Having similar or equal sized anchorate processes at either end.—e'qui-an'gu-lar, a. Having equal angles.—e-qua'cu-lar; e'qui-a'cu-lar, a.—e'qui-an'gu-lar'i-ty, n.—e'qui-an'har-mon'ic, a. Math. Equally anharmonic: applied to the situation of four points or elements (one of them being imaginary) whose anharmonic ratio is a cube root of unity.—e'qui-an'har-mon'i-cal-ly, adv.—e'qui-ar'cal, n. Math. A line which runs through a system of curves, cutting off arcs equal when measured from the origin.—e'qui-a-tel'e-late, a. Having equal joints with another.—e'qui-axe, a. Having equal axes.—e'qui-axed‡; e'qui-ax'i-alt.—e'qui-bal'ance, vt. To counterpoise.—e'qui-bal'anced, a. See EQUILIBRIUM.—e'qui-bi-ra'di-ate, a. Having two equal rays, as a spongespicule.—e'qui-cel'lu-lar, a. Made up of similar cells.—e'qui-changeable-ness, n.—e'qui-chlo'ride, n.—e'qui-con'vex, a. Having two convex surfaces of equal curvature.—e'qui-cres'cent, a. Growing at the same rate.—e'qui-cruss, a. Math. Possessing equal cross-ratios.—e'qui-cu'ral, a. Having legs or sides equally long.

Other words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

Eq'ui-das, 1 ek'wı-dĭ; 2 ĕk'wı-dĭ, n. pl. Mam. The horse family: a family of perissodactyl ungulates, especially those having the median digits enlarged and alone functional (as hoofs), the lateral being rudimentary or reduced to splint-bones, the molars hypsodont and their valleys filled with cement, and incisors with the enamel invaginated from the cutting-surfaces into pits: embracing the horses, asses, and zebras. See HORSE. [<EQUUS.]

e'qui-dense, a. Having equal density.—e'qui-de-par'ture, n. Meteor. Equal departure from a normal; as, lines of equidepartures (isometrals).—e'qui-di-ag'o-nal, a. Having equal diagonals.—e'qui-dif'fer-ent, a. Having equal differences.—e'qui-di-men'sion-al, a. Having equal dimensions; as, a mosaic of roughly equidimensional grains.
A. HARKER Petrology for Students p. 24. [C. U. P. 1897.]—e'qui-dis'tal-ly, adv. Equally in distal relation.

e'qui-dis'tant, 1 ı'kwı-dis'tənt; 2 ē'kwı-dis'tant, a. Situated at equal distances from a given point, as two cities.—e'qui-dis'tance, n.—e'qui-dis'tan'tial, a. Math. A curve equally distant at all points from a straight line in the same plane: a conception of Bolyai's non-Euclidean geometry.—equidistant surface, a surface equally distant at all points from a plane.—e'qui-dis'tant-ly, adv.

e'qui-di-ur'nal, a. Having days of equal length: equinoctial.—e'qui-dod'y-lous, a. A division yielding equality.—e'qui-el-lip'tic, a. Math. Having equal eccentricity: said of ellipses.—e'qui-ex'cel-lent, a. Of like or equal excellence.—e'qui-fa'cial-ly-den-cy, n.—e'qui-form, a. Having the same shape; uniform with others.—e'qui-for'mal†.—e'qui-for'mi-ty†, n. Uniformity.—e'qui-gla'cial, a. Having the same status regarding ice, or glacial action.—equiglacial lines, lines running between and connecting the several points on the surface of the earth at which, at any stated time, the same depth and quantity of ice is formed.—e'qui-graphic, a. Homolographic: said of maps in which all the areas are correctly proportioned.—e'qui-ja'cent, a. Lying at equal distances from a center.

eq'ui-lar'ce-nous, 1 ek'wı-lĭr'sı-nus; 2 ĕk'wı-lär'ce-nus, a. Of or pertaining to horse-stealing.

A pound sale gives a perfect . . . title to any animal sold therefrom, no matter what equilarcenous acts may have led to his incarceration. BOLLERWOOD Miner's Right p. 215. (MACM. 1890.]

e'qui-lat'er-al, 1 ı'kwı-lat'ər-al; 2 ē'kwı-lăt'er-al, a. 1. Having all the sides equal; as, an equilateral polygon. 2. Zool. (1) Capable of division lengthwise into halves. (2) Coiled in one plane, as certain foraminiferous shells.

[< LL. æquilateralis, < L. æquus, equal, + latus (later-), side.]—equilateral arch, same as POINTED ARCH.—e. bivalve, a shell divisible into symmetrical halves by a line from the apex of the umbo downward.—e. hyperbola, a hyperbola with equal axes.—universality e., having each side of one equal to a side of the other: said of two figures.—e'qui-lat'er-al-ly, adv.

e'qui-lat'er-al-ly, n. A side of equal length with another, or a figure with equal sides.

e'qui-lib'rant, 1 ē'kwı-lib'rənt; 2 ē'kwı-lĭb'rant or ı-kwĭl'ı-brant; 2 ē'kwı-lĭb'rant, or e-kwĭl'ı-brant, n. Physics. A system of forces which, applied to a body, counteracts another system and produces equilibrium.

e'qui-lib'rate, 1 ē'kwı-lib'rēt; 2 ē'kwı-lĭb'rāt, v. [-RIBRAT-ED; -RIBRAT-ING.] I. t. 1. To bring into or keep in a state of equipoise or equilibrium. 2. To be in equilibrium with; counterpoise.

II. i. To be in equilibrium; balance.

Matter is found with mechanical push and pull inhering within it; and when these two are balanced in equilibrating resistance, there is rest. SPENCER Empirical Psychology p. 54. (n. d. ca. 1884.]

[< LL. æquilibratus, < L. æquus, equal, + libro; see LIBRATE, v.] e'qui-lib'rate†; e'qui-il'bri-ate†.—e'qui-li-bra'tion, n. The act of producing or maintaining an equilibrium, or the state of being in equilibrium; equipoise.—artificial equilibration (Sociol.), adjustment to environment by artificial means, including intelligent choice, as opposed to that brought about by natural selection. L. F. WARD Dynamic Sociology.

e'qui-li'brate, a. [Rare.] Equally balanced.

The equilibrate harmony of the Constitution.

e'qui-li'bra-tor, 1 ē'kwı-lai'brē-tar; 2 ē'kwı-lĭ'brā-tor, n. One who or that which maintains the equilibrium of anything, as a gyroscope on a monorail car. Specif.: (1) Aëron. Any of various contrivances for maintaining or restoring equilibrium in flying-machines and dirigible balloons.

The chief anxiety throughout the voyage was caused by the behavior of the lowest steel equilibrator, which was the distinctive feature of the "American."
Literary Digest n. 732, Oct. 26, '10.

(2) Elec. An apparatus for balancing circuits, as the device used in phototelegraphy for equalizing the primary and secondary currents.—e'qui-li'bra-to-ry, a. Tending or serving to produce or maintain equilibrium.

A comparison of various contrivances for maintaining the French currency law, and tends to maintain both gold and silver more steadily in value.
W. S. JEVONS Money and Mechanism pt. i. p. 30. [n. d. 1889.]

e'qui-li'brism, 1 ē'kwı-lai'brizm; 2 ē'kwı-lĭ'brĭsm, n. Philos. The doctrine that freedom of will consists in the power to counteract any given volition by an inhibitory opposing volition. [< L. æquilibrio; see EQUILIBRIUM.]

e-qui'li-brist, 1 ı-kwĭl'ı-brist; 2 e-kwĭl'ı-brist (XII), n. One skilled in the practise of balancing, as a rope-walker or tumbler. [< L. æquilibrio; see EQUILIBRIUM.]—e-qui'li-bris'tic, a.

e'qui-lib'ri-stat, 1 ı'kwı-lib'rı-stat; 2 ē'kwı-lĭb'rı-stāt, n. A device for ascertaining if a railroad-car retains its equilibrium when rounding a curve, or for measuring any deflection therefrom, and consisting of a U-shaped tube with capillary ends. [< EQUILIBRIUM + Gr. statos, standing still.]

e'qui-lib'ri-um, 1 ē'kwı-lib'rı-um; 2 ē'kwı-lĭb'rı-ŭm, n. 1. A state of balance produced by equal counteraction of two or more forces; equipoise. 2. Specif.: (1) Physics. The state of a body so acted upon by several counteracting forces that it has no tendency to move. Equilibrium is stable if after a slight displacement the body returns to its former position; unstable when such displacement causes it to move still further from its position; neutral, mobile, or indifferent when such displacement causes it to remains at rest. The three states are exemplified (a) by a suspended sphere, (b) by one balanced on the point of a needle, and (c) by one resting on a level surface.

The words equipoise and equilibrium are to be carefully distinguished. . . . Equilibrium signifies the state of a body which, submitted to action of any number of forces, is still in the same condition as if those forces did not act.
R. SHELLMAN, Jr. Physics pt. i, p. 19. [n. d. ca. 1867.]

—absorptiometric equilibrium (Physics), the equilibrium between several liquids in contact with the same liquid, due to the absorption of a different proportion of each.—chemical e., the condition of a chemical system arising, in the absence of reversible action, from decomposition and reproduction in like degree; in the case of irreversible action, from complete consumption of one or more reacting bodies.—convective e. (Physics), a state of balanced convection currents under the influence of buoyancy.—criterion of e. (Physics), a rule formulated by Willard Gibbs for determining whether equilibrium exists in an isolated system: "The entropy is a maximum when equilibrium exists when the entropy is constant or decreasing; and when its entropy is constant, equilibrium exists when the energy is constant or decreasing."—e. of demand and supply (Econ.), the balance of forces controlling or influencing demand and supply: so called by Marshall.—e. of forces (Philos.), a state of balance in the universe toward which, according to the philosophy of Herbert Spencer, all physical, chemical, and vital processes are but steps.—e. ring, same as RELIEF FRAME.—e'qui-lib'ri-um-scale', a balance maintaining constant equilibrium with recording mechanism for varying weights.—e. valve, n. 1. A valve having the same pressure on each side. 2. A valve to equalize pressures, as in a Corniah steam-engine.—in equilibrio, in a state of equipoise.—labile e., a state of equilibrium in which particles move or slip about or are considered as so do. Specif., in chemistry, chemical equilibrium where interchange of similar atoms is going on; and in physics, the equilibrium of a liquid below its freezing or above its boiling-point.—statistical e. (Statist. Mech.), in any system of an ensemble variation of the density-in-phase without variation of the distribution in phase of the ensemble.—e'qui-lib'ri-al, a. Pertaining to or showing equilibration.—e'qui-lib'ri-ous, a. Having or being in equilibrium; evenly balanced.—e'qui-lib'ri-ous-ly, adv.—e'qui-li'bize, vi. To bring into a state of equilibrium; counterpoise; make tranquil.

e'qui-lo'bate, a. Having similar lobes to the cranial fin, as most fishes.—e'qui-lobed', a. Equilobate.—e'qui-lo'bus, a. Equilobate.—e'qui-mo'lar, a. Equimolecular.—e'qui-mo-lec'u-lar, a. Having or pertaining to an equality of molecules; specif. (Chem.), containing substances in the proportion of their molecular weights, as solutions.—equimolecular solutions (Phys. Chem.), solutions which contain quantities of dissolved substances in like ratio to their molecular weights.—e'qui-ne-mer'tal, a. Physics. Having equal moments of inertia; specif., having equal moments of inertia about the three principal axes: said of solids.—equimomental cone of a rigid body, a cone described by a line so moving that the moment of inertia of the body about it is always the same.—equimomental ellipsoid, an ellipsoid that represents by its moments of inertia about all axes the corresponding moments of a given body.—e'qui-mul'ti-pl(e), a. Produced by multiplying by the same number.—e'qui-mul'ti-pl(e), n. One of two or more products of different quantities by the same multiplier.

E-qui'ne, 1 ı-kwaı'nı; 2 ē-kwī'nē, n. pl. Mam. The Equidæ, most restricted, as a subfamily. [<EQUUS.]

e'qui'nal, 1 ı-kwaı'nəl; 2 ē-kwī'nal, a. Equine.

eq'ui-nate, 1 ek'wı-nēt; 2 ĕk'wı-nāt, vt. [-NATED; -NATING.] To introduce the virus of glanders into.

e'quine, 1 ĭ'kwaın or ĭ'kwın; 2 ē'kwīn or ē'kwin. I. a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or like a horse. 2. Of or pertaining to the Equidæ.

The mule is apt to forget all but the equine side of his pedigree.
LOWELL Bigelow Papers second series, iii, intro. letter.

II. n. A horse; one of the Equidæ. [< L. equinus, < equus, horse.]—equine antelope, same as HEARTHOG.—e. variola, same as EQUINIA.—e-qui'n-ty, n. Equine nature or character.

e-qui'n-ta, 1 ı-kwaı'nə; 2 e-kwī'n-a, n. 1. Pathol. A virulent contagious disease characterized by pustular eruptions, usually in equine animals; horsepox. 2. The glanders; farcy. [< L. equinus; see EQUINE.]

e-qui'n'ta, 1 ı-kwaı'nə; 2 e-kwī'n-a, n. [Am. Ind.] The quinsat.

e'qui-noc'tial, 1 ı'kwı-nok'shəl; 2 ē'kwı-nŏk'shal, a. 1. Occurring at or near the time of an equinox; as, an equinoctial gale.

A wild equinoctial storm was howling around the battlements of the castle. MRCIAY John of Barneveld vol. ii, p. 410. [n.d
2. Of or pertaining to the equinox, or equality of day and night. 3. Opening and closing at midday hours; said of certain flowers, as the four-o'clock. 4. [Rare.] Of or pertaining to the equator or equatorial regions; equatorial. [< L. æquinoctialis, < æquinoctium; see EQUINOX.] e'qui-noc'tion-al; e'qui-noc'tion-ar-y.—equinoctial colure, the hour-circle passing through the equinoctial points.—e. line, the equator.—e. points, the points of intersection of the equator and the ecliptic. Called often the equinoxes.—e. time, time reckoned from the moment at which the sun passes the vernal equinox.

e'qui-noc'tial, n. 1. A severe storm occurring usually at or near the equinox, and popularly but erroneously believed to be caused by the sun's crossing the equator. 2. The equator, either celestial or terrestrial.

e'qui-noc'tial-ly, adv. In the direction of the equinoctial or equator. e'qui-noc'tion-al-ly, adv.

eq'ui-no-va'rus, 1 ek'wı-no-vā'rus; 2 ĕk'wı-no-vā'rŭs, n. [L.] Pathol. A form of club-foot.

e'qui-nox, 1 ĭ'kwı-noks; 2 ē'kwı-nŏks, n. 1. Astron. One of the two opposite points in the heavens at which the celestial equator intersects the ecliptic. When the sun in its apparent annual course arrives at one of these points, day and night in all parts of the earth are theoretically of equal length. The sun's apparent motion gradually. See PRECESSION. 2. The time at which the sun crosses the equator, about March 21 and Sept. 22. As the time when the sun arrives at an equinoctial point does not necessarily occur at midnight, the dates, but may precede or follow it by several hours, the lengths of the day and night at these dates often vary by several minutes.

When descends on the Atlantic The gigantic Storm-wind of the equinox. LONGFELLOW Seaweed st. 1.

3. [Rare.] An equinoctial storm. 4†. Equality of day and night; hence, anything equal to another. 5†. A match. [< F. équinoxe, < L. æquinoctium, < æquus, equal, + nox (noct-), night.] e'qui-noc'tian†; e'qui-noc'tion†; e'qui-noc'ti-um†.—autumnal e., the point passed by the sun when crossing the equator from north to south, about Sept. 22.—mean e., a point on the ecliptic which would mark the position of the equinox if the latter moved uniformly, instead of irregularly.—vernal e., the point which the sun passes in crossing the equator from south to north, about March 21.

e'qui-nu'mer-ant, a. Having the same number.

e-quip', 1 ı-kwĭp'; 2 e-kwĭp', vt. [E-QUIPPED', E-QUIP'PED; E-QUIP'PING.] 1. To furnish or fit out for any service, task, or course; provide with all that is necessary for a successful undertaking; as, the steamer was equipped for a two years' cruise. 2. To dress or array, as in a particular manner or for a special purpose; array; as, she came out of her room equipped for the ball. [< OF. equiper, esquiper, < Ice. skipa, set in order, equip, prob. < root of skapa, shape, but influenced by skip, ship.] e-squippe'†.—e-quip'per, n.

eq'ui-page, 1 ĭ. 1 ĭ. To equip; furnish with equipage. II. t. To stand or belong in respect to matter. [M.]

eq'ui-page, 1 ek'wı-pij; 2 ĕk'wı-paj, n. 1. The outfit, including all essentials, prepared or necessary for a given purpose, as for an army, a traveler, or a vessel about to depart; an equipment; as, camp-equipage. 2. A carriage, usually with servants, and with its horses and servants and their belongings; as, the prince travels with a grand equipage.

A gay And brilliant equipage, that flashed and spun.
LONGFELLOW Wayside Inn, Lady Wentworth st. 4.

3. Imposing display; retinue; state. 4. [Archaic.] A complete service of certain articles; the dishes, utensils, etc., used for a certain purpose; as, a breakfast equipage. 5†. Dress; accoutrements; decoration. 6†. A collection of small implements and trinkets, as scissors, tweezers, etc., worn on a chatelaine or in a case hung from the waist. 7†. Equality. [OF., < equiper; see v.] e-quip'a-ra-bi(e), a. Comparable; equivalent.—e-quip'arance, n. [Rare.] Equality of reciprocal relationship.—e-quip'a-ran-cy‡.—e-quip'a-rant. 1. a. Exactly reciprocal; equivalent. II. n. [Rare.] Anything of equal value or like relationship with another.—e-quiv'a-rate', v. To reduce to a level; treat as on the same level. 2. To compare.—e-quiv'a-ra'tion, n. 1. [Archaic.] A placing on the same level or footing. 2†. A comparing; parallel.—e'qui-pare', v. Same as EQUIPARATE.—e'qui-par-ti'tion, n. Physics. Equal distribution, especially of energy in a quantity of moving molecules.—e'qui-pe'dal, a. Equal-footed, or having the pairs of feet equal.—e'qui-pede. I. a. Having legs of equal length; as, equipede chilopods. e'qui-ped‡. II. n. An equipede chilopod.—e'qui-per'cent-age, n. The state of being in equipoise; an unbiased condition.—e'qui-pen'dent, a. Hanging evenly balanced.—e'qui-pe'ri-od'ic, a. Having equal periods, as the strokes of a bell.

e-quip'ment, n. [1 kwip'ment or -ment; 2 e-kwip'ment, n. 1. The act or process of equipping with all needful supplies for any special service; as, the equipment of a fleet. 2. The state of being thus supplied or fitted out. 3. Whatever constitutes an outfit or preparation for some special purpose; as, a diplomatist's equipment in modern languages. Specifically: (1) pl. Mil. Arms, horses, accouterments, etc.

A pair of greaves . . . was one of the six articles of armor which formed the complete equipment of a Greek warrior.
ARTHUR Homer's Iliad bk. iii. p. 271, note. [n. 1855.]

(2) Rolling-stock and the rest of the apparatus necessary for operating a railway, as distinguished from the stations and trackage. [< F. équipement, < OF. equiper; see EQUIP.]—equipment bond (Railroad.), a bond for which the rolling-stock alone is pledged, in distinction to one in which real estate is the security.

e'qui-poise, 1 ē'kwi-poiz; 2 ē'kwi-pōiz, n. [-POISER; -POIS'ING.] To hold in or bring into equipoise; balance equally, serve as an equipoise to; counterbalance.

e'qui-poise, n. 1. Equality or equal distribution of weight, power, or force; even balance; equilibrium: figuratively applied to balanced conditions of moral, social, and political interests or forces. 2. A counterbalancing force; counterpoise; as, the weight in the scale is the equipoise of that on the beam.

e'qui-pol'e, 1 ē'kwi-pol; 2 ē'kwi-pōl'ē, n. Her. A French charge having a checky field, the number of squares being limited to nine.

e'qui-pol'lence, 1 ē'kwi-pol'ens; 2 ē'kwi-pōl'ēns, n. 1. The state or quality of being equipollent; equality of weight, power, significance, or influence. 2. Logic. Sameness of force or meaning in two or more propositions differently expressed, as in "it is always prepared" and "he is never unprepared." 3. Math. The relation of two parallel lines equal in length. [< LL. æquipollen(t-)s; see EQUIPOLLENT.] e'qui-pol'len-cy†.

e'qui-pol'lent, 1 ē'kwi-pol'ent; 2 ē'kwi-pōl'ēnt, a. 1. Equal in weight, power, significance, etc.; equivalent.

Intellectual and ethical rights are equipollent.
WISCHELL Science and Religion ch. 8, p. 212. [w. & r. 1877.]

2. Logic. Equivalent in meaning and force, as an affirmative and a double negative. Math. Equal and parallel. [< F. équipollent, < LL. æquipollen(t-)s, of equal power, < L. æquus, equal, + pollen(t-)s, ppr. of pollo, be strong.] e'qui-pol'lent-ly, adv.—e'qui-pol'lent-ness, n.

e'qui-pon'der-ance, n. Equality of weight; balance; equipoise.—e'qui-pon'der-ate, v. = e'qui-pon'der-ant, a. Of equal weight; evenly balanced.—e'qui-pon'der-ate, v. I. t. 1. To equal in weight; counterbalance. 2. To put into well-balanced condition. II. i. [Rare.] To be equal in weight.—e'qui-pon'der-a'tion, n.—e'qui-pon'der-ous, a. Having the same weight; equiponderant.—e'qui-pon'der-ous-ness, n.—e'qui-pon'di-ous†, a. Of equal weight on both sides.—e'qui-pore', n. Biol. The state of being equipotent.—e'qui-po'tent, a. 1. Equally powerful. 2. Biol. Having equal potency: said of parental character having equal but mutually exclusive representation in the gametes of offspring.

e'qui-po-ten'tial, 1 ē'kwi-po-ten'shal; 2 ē'kwi-po-tĕn'shal, a. 1. Physics. Having equal potential at all points: said of a line, surface, or region. Such lines or surfaces in a field of force cut all lines of force at right angles, and are lines or surfaces of level, whether electric, magnetic, or gravitational.

The region of space in which the potential is higher than a certain value is divided from the region in which it is lower than this value by a surface called an equipotential surface.
J. C. MAXWELL Electricity pt. 1, p. 70. [MACM. 1888.]

2. Having equal power or influence. [< EQUI- + POTENTIAL.]—equipotential curve, a curve whose potential is invariable at all points.—e'qui-po-ten'ti-al'i-ty, n.

e'qui-prob'a-bil-ism, n. The doctrine that when two opposed opinions on a moral question are equally probable, one is at liberty to adopt either of the two.—e'qui-prob'a-bil-ist, n. One of a school of casuists holding the doctrine of equiprobabilism.—e'qui-pro-duc'ing, a. Having equal production.—e'qui-ra'di-ate, a. Possessing radii of the same length.—e'qui-ra'di-cal, a. Equally radical.

E-qui'ri-a, 1 ē-kwi'ri-ə; 2 ē-kwi'ri-ə, n. Antiq. A Roman festival held annually on Feb. 27 and March 14 on the Campus Martius in honor of Mars, the features of which were horse-racing and athletic sports.

e'qui-ro'tal, 1 ē'kwi-rō'tal; 2 ē'kwi-rō'tal, a. Having wheels of the same diameter, as a vehicle or machine; of equal rotation. [< EQUI- + L. rota, wheel.] [Same as AXIOMIC.]

e'qui-sē', 1 ē'ki-sē'; 2 ē'ki-sē', a. Her. e'qui-seg-men'tal, 1 ē'kwi-seg-men'tal; 2 ē'kwi-seg-mĕn'tal, a. Having equal segments: said of two lines.

Eq'ui-se-ta'ce-æ, 1 ek'wi-si-tā'si-ē; 2 ĕk'wi-se-tā'ce-ē, n. pl. Bot. A family of rush-like vascular cryptogamous plants — the horsetail family — forming the order Equisetales, with extensively creeping rootstocks, and jointed, usually hollow stems. It consists of a single genus, Equisetum, and about 25 species, widely distributed. Fossil plants of this family abound in Mesozoic rocks. [< L. equisetum, < equus, horse, + sæta, bristle.]—eq'ui-se-ta'ceous, a.—Eq'ui-se-ta'les, n. pl. An order of pteridophytic plants embracing the family Equisetaceæ only.

a, fertile stem; b, sterile stem.

Eq'ui-se'tum, 1 ek'wi-sē'tum; 2 ĕk'wi-sē'tŭm, n. Bot. 1. The only genus of the Equisetaceæ, of which there are about a dozen American species, most of them known as horsetails or scouring-rushes. 2. [c-] A plant of this genus.

—eq'ui-se'tic, a. Chem. 1. Of, pertaining to, or derived from the Equisetaceæ. 2. Same as MALEIC.—equisetic acid, same as AGONITIC ACID.—eq'ui-se'ti-form, a. Bot. Having the form of Equisetum.—Eq'ui-se-ti'tes, n. Paleon. Those calamarian forms from the Carboniferous and older Mesozoic in regard to which, altho the stems are provided with sheaths, doubt exists as to whether their fructification agrees with Equisetum: retained as a generic name. Their cylindrical, furrowed stems are from ½ to 6 inches in diameter and as much as 35 feet in height.

e'qui-sid'ed, a. [Rare.] Having equal sides.—e'qui-sized, a. Of equal size.

eq'ui-son, 1 ek'wi-sən; 2 ĕk'wi-sŏn, n. [Rare.] A horse-jockey; a groom.

e'qui-sub'nanes, 1 ī'kwi-sĕ'nanz or i-kwi'ə-nanz; 2 ē'kwi-sŭ'nanz or e-kwi'ə-nanz, n. The consonance which exists between octaves.—e'qui-so'nant, a. In ancient and medieval music, of like or equal sound, as a tone and its octave.

e'qui-su-fi'cien-cy, n. Equal sufficiency.

eq'ui-ta-bi(e), 1 ek'wi-tə-bi]; 2 ĕk'wi-tə-bl, a. 1. Characterized by equity, or fairness and just dealing; impartial; as, an equitable division of property: rarely said of persons.

A free, just, and equitable government has always developed the powers of the human mind. ALEX. CAMPBELL in Campbell and Owens Debate vol. i, p. 6. [n. a. & r. 1829.]

2. Conformable to natural right and justice, as distinguished from positive or technical rules; conformable to right and justice in the moral rather than the legal sense. 3. Law. (1) Of or pertaining to the principles of right and justice as administered by courts of equity, having relation to the system of rules and remedies enforced by those courts, as distinguished from courts of common law; as, an equitable right or remedy. (2) Within the cognizance of a court of equity. [< F. équitable, < équité: see EQUITY.] SYN.: see HONEST; JUST; RIGHT.—equitable assignment, an assignment, as of rights of action, possibilities, expectancies, or things not in being, which, tho not good at law, is enforceable in equity.—e. conversion, a change in the nature of property in contemplation of law, to effect some purpose, such as the intention of a testator, or the duties to a contract.—e. estate, an estate acquired by operation of equity or cognizable only in courts of equity, as the estate of one for whose use lands are held by another.—e. jointure, see JOINTURE.—-ness, n.—eq'ui-ta-bly, adv.

eq'ui-tan-cy, 1 ek'wi-tən-si; 2 ĕk'wi-tan-cy, n. 1. Horsemanship. 2†. Bot. The state of being equitant. said of leaves.

e'qui-tan-gen'tial, a. Having the tangent equal to a constant line.

eq'ui-tant, 1 ek'wi-tənt; 2 ĕk'wi-tant, a. 1. Biol. Overlapping or riding, as leaves folded forward longitudinally on the midrib so that each embraces the one placed next within it, as in the iris. 2. Mounted on or riding a horse; being on horseback. [< L. equitan(t-)s, ppr. of equito, ride, < equus (equi-), horseman, < equus, horse.]

eq'ui-ta'tion, 1 ek'wi-tē'shən; 2 ĕk'wi-tā'shŏn, n. 1. The act or art of riding on horseback; horsemanship. He made a vault that would have amazed the most experienced master of equitation.
IRVING Alhambra: Two Discreet Statues p. 431. [c. p. r.]

2. A ride or excursion on horseback. [< L. equitation(n-), < equitatus, pp. of equito; see EQUITANT.]—eq'ui-ta-tiv(es, a. Of or pertaining to horsemanship.

e'qui-tem'po-ra'ne-ous, a. [Rare.] Equal in time-lengths; isochronous.

e'qui-ten'sal, 1 ī'kwi-ten'səl; 2 ē'kwi-tĕn'sal. n. Math. A line which cuts a system of lines under tension, at points where the tensions are equal.

eq'ui-tes, 1 ek'wi-tiz; 2 ĕk'wi-tēz, n. pl. Rom. Antiq. The equestrian order of nobility in ancient Rome, standing between the senatorial order and the people, and consisting originally of those who served in the knights. [L., pl. of eques (equit-); see EQUITANT.]

eq'ui-toon', 1 ek'wi-tūn'; 2 ĕk'wi-tōōn', n. An African antelope (Antilope adenota).

eq'ui-ty, 1 ek'wi-ti; 2 ĕk'wi-ty, n. [-TIED, 1 -tid; 2 -tid, pl.] 1. The quality of being equal or fair in any and all relations and circumstances; equality of rights; equal justice; in practise, the impartial distribution of justice. 2. The application of principles of right and justice to the legal adjustment of differences, where the law, by reason of its universality, is deficient. 3. Law. (1) The system of collateral or supplemental law administered by courts of equity.

This system, originating in the principles of justice, yet proceeds according to established rules and precedents. All courts of equity date from the AULA, or Curia Regis. Chief among its officers was the chancellor, "the keeper of the king's conscience," and later the custodian of his great seal. In exercising his discretion in affixing the seal, and consisting originally of ecclesiastics who were from the chancery, the chancellor came to exercise an equitable jurisdiction. The system springing out of efforts to ameliorate the rigors and supply the defects of the common law, yet proceeds according to the analogies of that law, and does not assume to subvert its doctrines. Modern definitions of equity have rarely excelled that of Aristotle: "The correction of the law where it is defective, by reason of its universality." Ethica Nicomacha, lib. v, c. 10. The Statute of Westminster 2d, in the reign of King Edward I. extended the authority of the chancellor, by making it a universality." Ethica Nicomacha, lib. v, c. 10. The Statute of Westminster 2d, in the reign of King Edward I. extended the authority of the chancellor, by making it a court of its universality." Ethica Nicomacha, lib. v, c. 10. The Statute of Westminster 2d, in the reign of King Edward I. extended the authority of the chancellor, by making it a court of jurisdiction was not permanently and distinctly established until the reign of Richard II. It extends, not alone over cases where courts of judicature do not recognize any rights, but also over cases where, altho a remedy is given at common law, it is not deemed sufficient in such cases of mistake or accident. Since the judicature of the English Judicature Acts of 1873 and 1876, the courts of equity and common law have been combined in the one Supreme Court of Judicature, and claims and defenses which formerly only the court of equity would have recognized are now of equal force at common law. In most of the United States there are no longer separate courts of equity, no distinction existing between actions at law and suits in equity. Under the Constitution the federal judges were given full equity jurisdiction. (2) [U. S.] Value remaining above the amount for which any property is mortgaged or is sold for the benefit of creditors. (3) A right recognized and enforceable by a court of equity, but not remedial by common law. (4) Any system of legal procedure designed to modify and liberalize a severe code, as the rules and precedents of the Roman prætors and ediles forming the jus honorarium. [< F. équité, < L. æquitā(t-)s, < æquus, equal.] eq'ui-ta-ble. SYN.: see JUSTICE.—eq'ui-ty-drafts'man, n. [Eng.] lawyer who drafts equity-pleadings.—e. jurisprudence, that system of jurisprudence which comprehends every matter of law for which common law provides no, or an inadequate, remedy. See EQUITY, 3 (1).—e. of redemption, the equitable right accorded to a mortgagor to redeem his mortgaged premises on payment of the sum due, notwithstanding that the time appointed for payment has passed. This right cannot be annulled except by certain legal actions or the tenure of the property by the mortgagee according to the statute of limitations.—maxims of e., the body of rules built up in course of time which govern the administration of the equity jurisdiction; among them are: He who seeks equity must do equity; he who comes into equity must come with clean hands; where the equities are equal the law will prevail; once a mortgage always a mortgage, etc.

e'qui-vale, 1 ī'kwi-vāl; 2 ē'kwi-vāl, n. [Rare.] To be equivalent to; furnish an equivalent for; countervail. e-quiv'a-lence†; e-quiv'a-len-cy†.

e-quiv'a-lence, 1 ī-kwiv'ə-lens; 2 e-kwiv'ə-lĕns, n. 1. The state of being equivalent, in any sense of the word. 2. Chem. (1) The property of having equal valences. (2) Same as VALENCE. 3. Geol. Correspondence in stratigraphic chronology. 4. [Rare.] The combining weight of an element. [< LL. equivalentia, < æquivalen(t-)s, ppr. of æquivaleo, have equal power, < L. æquus, equal, + valeo, be strong.] e-quiv'a-len-cy†.

e-quiv'a-lent, 1 ī-kwiv'ə-lent; 2 e-kwiv'ə-lĕnt, n. 1. Equal in value, force, meaning, or the like; equal so far as concerns the matter under consideration; as, two negatives are equivalent to an affirmative.

Strictly speaking, there are no synonyms in a language, the most closely resembling and apparently equivalent terms having some nice shade of distinction.
MATTHEWS Words p. 29. [s. o. s. 1876.]

2. Geom. Equal in area or in solid contents; a triangle may be equivalent to a hexagon: when so used, distinguished from identically equal or congruent. 3. Geol. Belonging to or formed in the same chronological horizon, however separated in present position.

All strata of the same era, as nearly as can be ascertained, are said to be equivalent strata, or those of the same geological horizon. DANA Geology pt. ii, div. ii, p. 101. [n. a. & r. 1863.]

4. Biol. Homologous in form or structure. 5. Chem. Having the same valence or combining power. 6. Math. Capable of one-to-one correspondence: graphically shown by the sign ∼. See CORRESPONDENCE. [< LL. æquivalen(t-)s; see EQUIVALENCE.] e-quiv'a-lent-ly.

SYN.: see ALIKE.—Prep.: equivalent to another object in volume, weight, worth, etc.—equivalent by completion (Geom.), capable of being made equivalent, formally by the annexation of equivalent polygons.—e. configurations (Geom.), configurations susceptible of reciprocal conversion by operations belonging to a given group.—e. eccentric (Mech.), a hypothetical eccentric, used in computing link-motions, by which the valve would get, approximately, the same motion as it does when a link-motion is operated by two eccentrics. e. orbit, when the amount of evaporation that would have occurred in a steam-boiler at a temperature from and at 212° F., had the feed-water been at a temperature of 212° F., and the steam been dry and at normal atmospheric pressure.—e. girder (Nav. Arch.), a graphic representation of the section of a ship, showing the distribution of the material in relation to the neutral axis. It is customary to make two diagrams, for hogging and sagging, respectively.—e. groups of points (Math.), any two groups of intersections of a fundamental curve F by curves of the pencil $\phi_1 - w\phi_2 = 0$, the ϕ's being rational polynomials in x and y, and two values of w representing the groups of points.—e. number, same as EQUIVALENT, n., 2.—e. sine-wave (Elec.), a sine-wave of the same effective value, frequency, and phase displacement as a wave unrelated to the law of sines.—e. weight, same as EQUIVALENT, n., 2.—-ly, adv. In an equivalent manner.

e-quiv'a-lent, n. 1. That which is or is regarded as equal in value, force, measure, meaning, or the like, to something else used in comparison; something that will offset or counterbalance or indicate the like.

Our influence is the precise equivalent of our human worth or worthlessness.
STALKER Imago Christi ch. 17, p. 332. [n. a. & s. 1890.]

2. Chem. (1) A number or amount representing one of the relative weights in which elements (a) unite with each other to form compounds, or (b) replace other elements in compounds: combining weight. Since the atomic weight of hydrogen is usually taken as a standard, thus making the equivalent of an element a multiple or submultiple of its atomic weight, for example, with an atomic weight of 1.008, combines with chlorin, with an atomic weight of 35.45, to form hydrochloric acid. If the hydrogen be replaced by sodium, with an atomic weight of 23.05, sodium chlorid results. It is also the chlorin of sodium, hydrogen, and chlorin, or the numbers representing their weights, are equivalents. (2) (a) The combining weight of a compound or radical, or when compounded of a radical unites with one or more equivalents of an element to form a compound. (b) Specif.: The weight of a compound necessary to react chemically with one equivalent of another element. See COMBINING WEIGHT. 3. Geol. A stratum or series of strata deposited at the same period with strata referred to that are found elsewhere and may be of different lithological character, but usually contain fossils of similar types.

—electrochemical equivalent of an element (Phys. Chem.), the weight, expressed in grams, of an element or compound which is liberated from or brought into combination by one coulomb of electricity in electrolysis. Likewise much as, by Faraday's third law of electrolysis, if this equivalent is known for one element it thereby becomes known for all others, and since the electrochemical equivalent of hydrogen is found by experiment to be .00010105 gram, that of any other substance can be found by multiplying this weight by its chemical equivalent referred to hydrogen, which is its molecular weight divided by its valency. Thus, the molecular weight of oxygen is 16, and its valency 2. Its equivalent is therefore $16 \div 2 = 8$ and its electrochemical equivalent is equal to .00001105 × 8, or .0008840 gram.—Joule's e., same as MECHANICAL EQUIVALENT OF HEAT.—kinesthetic e. (Psychol.), the mental image representative of the muscular sense.—law of equivalents (Chem.), the law that the combining weights of any two substances that form separate compounds with a third are also their combining weights, or simple multiples of those weights, when they unite with each other.—mechanical e. of heat, the mechanical energy which, when transformed into heat, will produce one heat-unit: represented by J. In English units, according to the determination of Prof. Rowland, of Baltimore, it is 778.3; that is, the energy required to lift 778.3 pounds one foot will raise the temperature of one pound of water one degree Fahrenheit.—mechanical e. of light (Optics), the mechanical value of light expressed in terms of other forms of energy.—osmotic e. (Physics), the quantity of a substance that will produce, when dissolved, the same osmotic pressure as that due to the quantity in question (of some other substance) in the same volume of the solvent.– principle of kinesthetic equivalents (Psychol.), the principle that all voluntary movement must have some mental representative feeling or image, equivalent of the experience of the actual movement.– saponification e. (Chem.), the quantity of any oil or fat susceptible of saponification by a definite quantity of an alkali. It is customary to express this in the number of grams of oil saponified by 56.1 grams caustic potash or 40 grams caustic soda.

e'qui-val'ue, st. [Rare.] To regard and treat as of equal value; regard as at par with something.

e'qui-valve, 1 ē'kwi-vavz; 2 ē'kwi-vălv. I. a. Having the valves alike in form and size, as a bivalve shell.

e'qui-valved; e'qui-val'vu-lar†. II. n. A bivalve with both valves alike. [< equi-+ L. valva, folding door.]

e-quiv'o-cal, 1 ɪ-kwiv'ō-kăl; 2 ɪ-kwiv'o-căl, a. 1. Having a doubtful meaning or signification; capable of being understood in two ways; susceptible of various interpretations; ambiguous; as, an equivocal phrase, or test.

He wears a nondescript skullcap, which I conjecture, from some equivocal signs, had once been a fur hat.

3. Of uncertain significance, origin, character, or value; ascribable either to good or bad motives; undecided; questionable; suspicious; as, an equivocal character or position. 4†. Equivocating. [< LL. æquivocus, < L. æquus, equal, + vox (voc-), voice.]

Syn.: ambiguous, doubtful, dubious, indefinite, indeterminate, indistinct, questionable, suspicious. Equivocal (L. æquus, equal, and vox, voice, word) denotes that which may equally well be understood in either of two or more ways. Ambiguous (L. ambi, around, and ago, drive, lead) signifies lacking in distinctness or certainty, obscure or doubtful through indefiniteness of expression. Ambiguous is applied only to spoken or written statements; equivocal has other applications. A statement is ambiguous when it leaves the mind of the reader or hearer to fluctuate between two meanings, which would fit the language equally well; it is equivocal when it would naturally be understood in one way, but is capable of a different interpretation; an equivocal phrase, as a rule, intentionally deceptive, while an ambiguous utterance may be simply the result of a want either of clear thought or of adequate expression. That which is enigmatical must be unguessed, like a riddle; a statement may be purposely made enigmatical in order to provoke thought and study. That is doubtful which is fairly open to doubt; that is dubious which has become the subject of doubts so grave as scarcely to fall short of condemnation; as, a dubious reputation. Questionable may be used nearly in the sense of either dubious or of doubtful; a questionable statement is one that must be proved before it can be accepted. To say that one's honesty is questionable is a mild way of saying that in the opinion of the speaker he is likely to prove dishonest. Equivocal is sometimes, tho more rarely, used in this sense. A questionable character is one in regard to which all questions are likely to receive an unfavorable answer. Equivocal is sometimes, tho more rarely, used in this sense. A suspicious character gives manifest reason to be suspected; a suspicious temper suspects the motives and intentions of others with or without reason. For other synonyms, and for antonyms, see AMBIGUOUS.

– equivocal or doubtful chord, a musical chord common to two or more keys, employed in transitions from one key to another.– e. to (Cathol.), a sphere of temptation common to two or more diseases.– e-quiv'o-cal't-ly, n. 1. Equivocalness. 2. Something equivocal.– e-quiv'o-cal-ly, adv.– e-quiv'o-cal-ness, n. The equivocal state, character, or quality; ambiguity. e-quiv'o-ca-cy†.

e-quiv'o-cal, n. A word or term susceptible of more than one meaning; an ambiguous expression; equivoque. e-quiv'o-cate†.

e-quiv'o-cate, 1 ɪ-kwiv'o-kēt; 2 ɪ-kwiv'o-cāt, v. [-CAT'ED; -CAT'ING.] I. t. To use words of double meaning; speak equivocally; specif., to use language susceptible of different constructions with intent to mislead or deceive; prevaricate. II†. t. To render false, deceitful, or equivocal. [< LL. æquivocatus, pp. of æquivocor, be called by the same name, < æquivocus; see EQUIVOCAL, a.] Syn.: see prevaricate.– e-quiv'o-ca-ter, n.– e-quiv'o-ca'tion, 1 ɪ-kwiv'o-kē'shən; 2 ɪ-kwiv'o-cā'shon, n. 1. The act of equivocating, especially for the purpose of deceit; an intentionally equivocal expression.

According to etymology and the primitive use 'equivocation,' the fruitful mother of so much error, is the calling by the same name of things essentially diverse, calling intentionally or otherwise a real difference under a verbal resemblance.

ARCHBISHOP TRENCH English, Past and Present lect. vii, p. 316. [d. d. a. co. 1889.]

2. Logic. A fallacy arising from the employment of a word of doubtful import. Compare AMPHIBOLOGY.

eq'ui-voke, 1 ĕk'wi-vōk; 2 ĕk'wi-vōk (xim), n. 1. eq'ui-voque, } An ambiguous term or expression; an equivocal word or phrase; a play upon words.

'Oh, it's as plain as the nose on your face,' said Mrs. Hackit, unreflectingly, not perceiving the equivoque in her comparison.

GEORGE ELIOT Amos Barton ch. 6, p. 50. [u.]

e'qui-volt, 1 ē'kwi-vōlt; 2 ē'kwi-vōlt, n. Elec. A proposed electrical unit of chemical decomposition; the mechanical energy of one volt exerted under unit conditions through one equivalent of chemical action expressed in grains. [< equi- + VOLT².]

e'qui-yo-lu'mi-nal, a. Having an equal volume or mass.

e-quiv'o-rous, 1 ɪ-kwiv'o-rus; 2 ɪ-kwiv'o-rus, a. Feeding on horse-flesh; hippophagous. [< L. equus, horse, + L. voro, devour.]

e'qui-o'ses', 1 ē'kwi-ō'sēz; 2 ē'kwi-ō'sēz, n. An equal vote; tie.

e'quoid, 1 ē'kwoid; 2 ē'kwoid, a. Of, pertaining to, or like the Equidæ. [< Equus + -OID.]

E-qui'le-us, 1 ɪ-kwil'i-us; 2 ɪ-kwy'le-ŭs, n. 1. An equatorial constellation without bright stars. See CONSTELLATION. 2. [L.] Rom. Antiq. An instrument of torture for forcing confessions from accused persons. [L., < equus, horse.]– Equuleus Pictoris, the Painter's Easel, a southern constellation: same as PICTOR. See CONSTELLATION.

E'quus, 1 ē'kwus; 2 ē'kwŭs, n. Mam. A genus typical of Equidæ. [L., horse.]

er-gas'ĭ-o-ma'ni-a, 1 ûr-gas'i-o-mē'ni-a; 2 êr-găs'ĭ-o-mā'nĭ-a, n. Pathol. A morbid craving, amounting almost to a mania, for work; in the case of surgeons, manifested by an insatiable desire to operate. [< Gr. ergasia, work, + MANIA.]

er-gas'ĭ-o-pho'bi-a, 1 ûr-gas'i-o-fô'bi-a; 2 êr-găs'ĭ-o-fō'bĭ-a, n. Pathol. A morbid aversion to work; also, excessive timidity on the part of a surgeon in operating, even when the conditions imperatively call for an operation. Compare ERGASIOMANIA. [Arch. A studio; an atelier.

er'gas-te'ri-on, 1 ûr'gas-ti'ri-on; 2 êr'găs-tē'rĭ-ŏn, n. Gr.

er-gas'tic, 1 ûr'gas'tik; 2 êr-găs'tĭc, a. Biol. Designating somewhat stable substances whose formation is due to cellcytoplasmic activity. [< Gr. ergastikos, < ergon, work.]

er'gas-tif'ĭn, 1 ûr'gas-tif'in; 2 êr'găs-tĭf'ĭn, n. pl. Gr. Antiq. Young girls selected for the duty of weaving and embroidering the peplum of Athena. A procession of such is supposedly represented in the frieze of the Parthenon. [< Gr. ergastinai, workers, < ergon, work.]

er-gas'to-plasm, 1 ûr-gas'to-plazm; 2 êr-găs'to-plăzm, n. Biol. The more active protoplasmic substance in a plant cell from which fibrillar formations arise. See ARCHOPLASM.

er-gas'tu-lus, 1 ûr-gas'tiu-lum; 2 êr-găs'tŭ-lŭm, n. [-LA, pl.] [L.] Rom. Antiq. A prison or house of correction.

As workers on farms, they [the slaves] labored not unfrequently under chains, and slept at night in the cells of the ergastula, under-ground, wet, filthy, and full of disease.
Sroans Divine Origin of Christianity lec. v. p. 150. [n.a.v. s.s.]

er'ga-tan'dro-morph, 1 ûr'ga-tan'dro-môrf; 2 êr'ga-tăn'dro-môrf, n. Entom. An ant, as in certain polymorphic species, which is a male possessing worker characters: opposed to gynandromorph. Wheeler. [< Gr. ergatês, worker, + anêr, male, + morphê, form.]— er'ga-tan'dro-mor'phic, a. er'ga-tan'dro-mor'phism, n. The state in the Hymenopterous Formicidæ prohibited by ergatoid males; ergatandry.— er'ga-tan'dry, n. Entom. Ergatomorphism in a male ant.

er'ga-tan'ger, 1 ûr'ga-tan-ger; 2 êr'ga-tăn'ġer, n. A form of male ant among certain kinds of ants, which resembles a worker in having no wings, and in the structure of the antennæ; an ergatoid male.

er'ga-tan'ger, a. Resembling a worker ant. Wheeler.

er'ga-to-gyne, 1 ûr'ga-to-jain; 2 êr'ga-to-ġīn, n. Ergatomorphism in a female ant.— er'ga-tog'y-nous, a. Having fecund apterous females: said of certain species of ants. er'ga-to-gyn'ic†.

er'ga-toid, 1 ûr'ga-toid; 2 êr'ga-tŏid, a. 1. Wingless, and resembling a worker in appearance and to some extent in structure: said of a form of male in certain polymorphic ants. 2. Having wingless individuals of either sex; of the nature of a worker applied to certain species of ants. See WORKER. [< Gr. ergatês, worker, + eidos, form.]

er'ga-to-mor'phism, 1 ûr'ga-to-môr'fizm; 2 êr'ga-to-môr'fĭzm, n. Entom. A condition of winglessness in certain kinds of ants, both male and female, that is beneficial to the aspect of workers.— er'ga-to-mor'phic, a. Pertaining to or exhibiting ergatomorphism; ergatoid.

er'go, 1 ûr'go; 2 êr'gō, adv. [L.] Hence; therefore: used to introduce the conclusion of a syllogism or argument.

KINGSLEY Hereward the Wake ch. xxvi. [n. a. 1889.]

— er'go-ism, n. A slavish adherence to the rules of logic.

er'go-gen'e-sis, 1 ûr'go-jen'i-sis; 2 êr'gō-ġĕn'ē-sĭs, n. Biol. Growth-energy of organisms due to mechanical causes resident in the organism or physical agencies.

er'go-gram, 1 ûr'go-gram; 2 êr'gō-grăm, n. Psychophys. A record made by an ergograph.

er'go-graf, 1 ûr'go-graf; 2 êr'gō-grăf, n. Psychophys. An instrument for recording work done by the muscles. In the form invented by Mosso, the work consists in lifting weights attached to the finger by a cord which passes over a pulley; and the work-record is traced by a writing-point on the smoked surface of a kymograph drum. Various other forms of the ergograph have been used in the study of fatigue and the changes in nervous energy due to muscular exertion. [< Gr. ergon, work, + -GRAPH.]— er'go-graph'ic, a.

er'gol'o-gy, 1 ûr-gol'o-ji; 2 êr-gŏl'ō-ġĭ, n. The physiology of work; the study of the functions of living cells.

er-gom'e-ter, 1 ûr-gom'i-tar; 2 êr-gŏm'e-tĕr, n. 1. An instrument or device for measuring work or force developed, as a dynamometer or a steam-engine indicator. 2. An instrument for the measurement of mental exertion or fatigue. Compare ERGOGRAPH. [< Gr. ergon, work, + metron, measure.]— er'go-met'ric, a.

er'go-my, 1 ûr'go-mi; 2 êr'gō-mĭ, n. The physiology of work.

Division of labor: applied by Haeckel to the adaptation of the cells of the body to different functions. [< Gr. ergon, work, + nomos, distribution.]

the quantity of a substance that will produce, when dissolved, the same osmotic pressure as that due to the quantity in question (of some other substance) in the same volume of the solvent.— principle of kinesthetic equivalents (Psychol.), the principle that all voluntary movement must have some mental representative feeling or image, equivalent of the experience of the actual movement.— saponification e. (Chem.), the quantity of any oil or fat susceptible of saponification by a definite quantity of an alkali. It is customary to express this in the number of grams of oil saponified by 56.1 grams caustic potash or 40 grams caustic soda.

e″qui-val′iant†, a. Equally valiant; of sufficient courage.

e″qui-val′ue, vt. [Rare.] To regard and treat as of equal value; regard as at par with something.

e′qui-valve, 1 ī′kwı-valv; 2 ē′kwi-vălv. I. a. Having the valves alike in form and size, as a bivalve shell. e′qui-valved‡; e″qui-val′vu-lar‡. II. n. A bivalve with both valves alike. [< EQUI- + L. valva, folding door.]

e-quiv′o-cal, 1 ı-kwiv′o-kəl; 2 e-kwĭv′o-cal, a. 1. Having a doubtful meaning or signification; capable of being understood in two ways; susceptible of various interpretations; ambiguous; as, an equivocal phrase, or test.

He wears a nondescript skull-cap, which I conjecture, from some equivocal signs, had once been a fur hat.

Syn.: ambiguous, doubtful, dubious, indefinite, indeterminate, indistinct, questionable, suspicious. Equivocal (L. equus, equal, and vox, voice, word) denotes that which may equally well be understood in either of two or more ways. Ambiguous (L. ambi, around, and ago, drive, lead) signifies lacking in distinctness or certainty, obscure or doubtful through indefiniteness of expression. Ambiguous is applied only to spoken or written statements; equivocal has other applications. A statement is ambiguous when it leaves the mind of the reader or hearer to fluctuate between two meanings, which would fit the language equally well; it is equivocal when it would naturally be understood in one way, but is capable of a different interpretation; an equivocal expression is, as a rule, intentionally deceptive, while an ambiguous utterance may be simply the result of a want either of clear thought or of adequate expression. That which is enigmatical must be guessed like a riddle; a statement may be purposely made enigmatical in order to provoke thought and study. That is doubtful which is fairly open to doubt; that is dubious which has become the subject of doubts so grave as scarcely to fall short of condemnation; as, a dubious reputation. Questionable may be used nearly in the sense either of dubious or of doubtful; a questionable statement is one that must be proved before it can be accepted. To say that one's honesty is questionable is a mild way of saying that in the opinion of the speaker he is likely to prove dishonest. Equivocal is sometimes, tho more rarely, used in this sense. A questionable character is one in regard to which all questions are likely to receive an unfavorable answer. Equivocal is sometimes, tho more rarely, used in this sense. A suspicious character gives manifest reason to be suspected; a suspicious temper suspects the motives and intentions of others, with or without reason. For other synonyms, and for antonyms, see AMBIGUOUS.

— equivocal or doubtful chord, a musical chord common to two or more keys, employed in transitions from one key to another.— e. symptom (Pathol.), a symptom common to two or more diseases.— e-quiv″o-cal′i-ty, n. 1. Equivocalness. 2. Something equivocal.— e-quiv′o-cal-ly, adv.— e-quiv′o-cal-ness, n. Equivocal state, character, or quality; ambiguity. e-quiv′o-ca-cy†.

e-quiv′o-cal, n. A word or term susceptible of more than one meaning; an ambiguous expression; equivoke. e-quiv′o-cate‡.

e-quiv′o-cate, 1 ı-kwiv′o-kēt; 2 e-kwĭv′o-cāt, v. [-CAT″ED; -CAT″ING.] I. i. To use words of double meaning; speak equivocally; specif., to use language susceptible of different constructions with intent to mislead or deceive; prevaricate. II†. t. To render false, deceitful, or equivocal. [< LL. æquivocatus, pp. of æquivocor, be called by the same name, < æquivocus; see EQUIVOCAL, a.] Syn.: see DISSEMBLE.— -ca″tor, n.— -ca-to-ry, a.

e-quiv″o-ca′tion, 1 ı-kwiv″o-kē′shən; 2 e-kwĭv″o-cā′shon, n. 1. The act of equivocating, especially for the purpose of deceit; an intentionally equivocal expression.

According to etymology and in primary use 'equivocation,' this fruitful mother of so much error, is the calling by the same name of things essentially diverse, hiding intentionally or otherwise a real difference under a verbal resemblance. TRENCH English, Past and Present lect. vii, p. 316. [K. P. & CO. 1889.]

2. Logic. A fallacy arising from the employment of a word of doubtful meaning. Compare AMPHIBOLOGY.

eq′ui-voke, } 1 ek′wı-vōk; 2 ĕk′wi-vōk (XIII), n. 1.
eq′ui-voque, } An ambiguous term or expression; an equivocal word or phrase; a play upon words.

GEORGE ELIOT Amos Barton ch. 6, p. 50. [H.]

e′qui-volt, 1 ī′kwı-vōlt; 2 ē′kwi-vōlt, n. Elec. A proposed electrical unit of chemical decomposition; the mechanical energy of one volt exerted under unit conditions through one equivalent of chemical action expressed in grains. [< EQUI- + VOLT[1].]

e″qui-vo-lu′mi-nal, a. Having an equal volume or mass.

e-quiv′o-rous, 1 ı-kwiv′o-rus; 2 e-kwĭv′o-rŭs, a. Feeding on horse-flesh; hippophagous. [< L. equus, horse, + L. voro, devour.]

erg, 1 ûrg; 2 ĕrg, n. In the C. G. S. system, the unit of work and of energy, being the work done in moving a body one centimeter against the force of one dyne, or the kinetic energy of two grams moving at the rate of one centimeter a second. One foot-pound equals about 13,560,000 ergs. The erg being so small, the joule is used as a practical unit. See JOULE. [< Gr. ergon, work.] er'gal.

— erg'met"er, n. An instrument for measuring the efficiency of an electric current in ergs.— erg'-sten", n. A unit of work equal to 10^{12} (ten thousand million) ergs. An erg-second is about 1⅓ horse-power.

er'gal, 1 ûr'gəl; 2 ĕr'găl, n. Physics. The quantity or analytic function that expresses the potential energy of a system and diminishes when work is done by the system. [< Gr. ergon, work.]

Er'ga-ne, 1 ûr'gə-nē; 2 ĕr'gă-nē, n. The goddess Athena, as patron of the arts, particularly of weaving.

Er'gas-tu'lĭ-dæ, 1 ûr'gə-stū'lĭ-dē; 2 ĕr'gă-stū'lĭ-dē, n. pl. Crust. A family of siphonostomatous copepods with a cyclopiform body, contracted abdomen, and long prehensile posterior antennæ: parasitic on fishes. Er'gas-tu'lus, n. (t. g.)— er'gas'l-lan, n.— er-gas'l-lid, n.— er-gas'l-loid, a.

er-gas'i-o-ma'ni-a, 1 ûr-gas'ĭ-o-mā'nĭ-ə; 2 ĕr-găs'ĭ-o-mā'nĭ-a, n. Pathol. A morbid craving, amounting at times to a mania, for work; in the case of surgeons, manifested by an insatiable desire to operate, whether an operation is justifiable or not. [< Gr. ergasia, work, + MANIA.]

er-gas"i-o-pho'bi-a, 1 ûr-gas'ĭ-o-fō'bĭ-ə; 2 ĕr-găs'ĭ-o-fō'bĭ-a, n. Pathol. An abnormal aversion to work; also, excessive timidity on the part of a surgeon to operate, even when the conditions imperatively call for an operation. Compare ERGASIOMANIA. [Arch. A studio; an atelier.

er'gas-te'ri-on, 1 ûr'gas-tē'rĭ-ən; 2 ĕr'găs-tē'rĭ-ŏn, n. Gr. Ant. 1. = ERGASTULUM, 2. 2. A place for executing somewhat stable substances whose formation is due to cell-cytoplasmic activity. [< Gr. ergastêrion, < ergon, work.]

er'gas-tu'lum, 1 ûr'gas-tū'lŭm; 2 ĕr'găs-tū'lŭm, n. [-LA, pl.] [L.] Rom. Antiq. A prison or house of correction.

As workers on farms, they [the slaves] labored not unfrequently under chains, and slept at night in the cells of the ergastula, dungeon-like, dark, filthy, and full of disease.

er'ga-tan'dro-morph, 1 ûr'gə-tan'dro-mŏrf; 2 ĕr'gă-tăn'dro-mŏrf, n. Entom. An ant, possessing certain polymorphic species, which is a male possessing worker characters: opposed to gynandromorph. Wheeler. [< Gr. ergatês, worker, + anêr, male, + morphê, form.]— er'ga-tan'dro-mor'phic, a.— er'ga-tan'drous‡.— er'ga-tan'dro-mor'phism, n. The state in the polymorphism of ants exhibited by ergatoid males: opposed to er'ga-tan'dry, n. Entom.

er'ga-tan-er, 1 ûr'gə-tan-ər; 2 ĕr'gă-tăn-ĕr, n. A form of ant among certain kinds which possesses, besides a worker in having no wings, and in the structure of the antennæ; an ergatoid male.

er'gate, 1 ûr'gāt; 2 ĕr'gāt, n. A worker ant. Wheeler.

er'ge-gog'ra, 1 ûr'gə-to-jăn'; 2 ĕr'gă-to-gĭn, n. Ergatomorphism in a female ant.— er'ga-tog'y-nous, a. Having fecund apterous females: said of certain species of ants. er'ga-to-gyn'ic‡.

er'ga-told, 1 ûr'gə-told; 2 ĕr'gă-tōld, a. 1. Wingless, and resembling a worker in appearance and to some extent in structure: said of a form of male in certain polymorphic ants. 2. Having wingless individuals of either sex; of the nature of a worker: applied to certain species of ants. See WORKER.

er'ga-to-mor'phism, 1 ûr'gə-to-mŏr'fĭzm; 2 ĕr'gă-to-mŏr'fĭsm, n. Entom. A condition of winglessness in certain kinds of ants, both male and female, which gives them the aspect of workers.— er'ga-to-mor'phic, a. Pertaining to or exhibiting ergatomorphism.

er'go, 1 ûr'go; 2 ĕr'gō, adv. [L.] Logic. Hence; therefore; used to introduce the conclusion of a logical syllogism or argument.

Kingsley Roman and Teuton p. 113. [macm. 1899.]

— er'go-lism, n. A slavish adherence to the rules of logic.

er'go-gen'e-sis, 1 ûr'gō-jen'ə-sĭs; 2 ĕr'gō-jĕn'ĕ-sĭs, n. Biol. Growth-energy of organisms due to mechanical causes resisting the force of inherited or physical agencies.

er'go-gram, 1 ûr'gō-gram; 2 ĕr'gō-grăm, n. Psychophys. A record made by an ergograph.

er'go-graph, 1 ûr'gō-graf; 2 ĕr'gō-grăf, n. Psychophys. An instrument for recording work done by the muscles. The form invented by Mosso, the work consists in lifting weights attached to the finger by a cord which passes over a pulley, and the work recorded is traced by a writing-point on the smoked surface of a kymograph drum. Various other forms of the ergograph have been used in the study of fatigue and of the changes in nervous energy due to muscular exertion. [< Gr. ergon, work, + -GRAPH.]— er"go-graph'ic, a.

er-gol'o-gy, 1 ûr-gol'o-jĭ; 2 ĕr-gŏl'o-gy, n. The physiology of work; the study of the functions of living cells.

er-gom'e-ter, 1 ûr-gom'ə-tər; 2 ĕr-gŏm'ĕ-tĕr, n. 1. An instrument or device for measuring work or force developed, as a dynamometer or a steam-engine indicator. 2. An instrument for the measurement of mental exertion or fatigue. Compare ERGOGRAPH. [< Gr. ergon, work, + metron, measure.]— er"go-met'ric, a.

er-gon'o-my, 1 ûr-gon'o-mĭ; 2 ĕr-gŏn'o-my, n. Physiol. Division of labor: applied by Haeckel to the adaptation of the cells of the body to different functions. [< Gr. ergon, work, + nomos, distribution.]

er"go-pho'bi-a, 1 ūr"go-fō'bɪ-ə; 2 ẽr"go-fō'bi-a, n. A fear or hatred of work; ergasiophobia.

er'go-plasm, 1 ūr'go-plazm; 2 ẽr'go-plăsm, n. Biol. Same as ARCHOPLASM.

er'go-stat, 1 ūr'go-stat; 2 ẽr'go-stăt, n. Med. An apparatus for light gymnastics, used in medical treatment.

er'go-ster"in, 1 ūr'go-ster"ɪn; 2 ẽr'go-stĕr"in, n. A crystalline compound ($C_{26}H_{40}O$) contained in ergot. [< ERGOT + STEARIN.]

er'got, 1 ūr'gət; 2 ẽr'got, n. 1. The horn-shaped sclerotium of Claviceps purpurea, a fungus that sometimes takes the place of the grain in rye and other grasses: much used in medicine to produce womb-contraction in parturition and to check flooding. 2. Vet. Surg. A soft horn-like mass growing from the skin of the fetlock. 3. Anat. The hippocampus minor. [F., also argot, spur.] er'gat†.— er'got-ed, a. Ergotized.— er-got'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from ergot.— ergotic acid, a volatile compound said to exist in ergot in combination with bases. — er'got-in, er'got-ine, n. 1. An amorphous alkaloid contained in ergot. 2. An extract of ergot. er"go-ti'na‡.

a, a head of rye affected by ergot; b, a mass of ergot.

er"go-teur'†, v. A wrangler; debater.

er"go-tin'ic, a. Chem. Same as ERGOTIC. — ergotinic acid, a substance of a poisonous nature found in ergot.— er-got'i-nin, er-got'i-nine, n. A colorless crystalline alkaloid ($C_{35}H_{40}N_4O_6$) contained in ergot; ecbolin. [< ERGOT.]

er'got-ism¹, 1 ūr'gət-izm; 2 ẽr'got-ĭsm, n. 1. A disease or morbid condition produced by excessive doses of ergot; poisoning from ergotized grain. 2. The formation of ergot in grasses. [< F. ergotisme, < ergot, ergot.]

er'got-ism², n. 1. Arguing; wrangling. 2. A logical conclusion or formal reasoning. [< F. ergotisme, < ergoter, quibble, < L. ergo, therefore.] — er'got-ist†, n. A pedantic logician.

er'got-ize¹, 1 ūr'gət-aiz; 2 ẽr'got-īz, vt. [-IZED; -IZ"ING.] To change into or affect with ergot; as, ergotized rye. er'got-ise‡.— er"got-i-za'tion, er"got-i-sa'tion, n.

er'got-ize², vi. To wrangle; argue. er'got-ise‡.

er'go-tol, 1 ūr'go-tōl or -tel; 2 ẽr'go-tōl or -tŏl, n. Pharm. An ergot preparation two and one-half times as strong as the officinal fluid extract. [< ERGOT + -OL.]

Erh., abbr. Erhard.

E'ri, 1 ī'rai; 2 ē'rī, n. Bib. Gen. xlvi, 16.

eri-, prefix. Very much. [< Gr. eri-.] e'ri-a, 1 ī'rɪ-ə; 2 ē'ri-a, n. [Assam.] 1. A silkworm (Attacus ricini) of Bengal and Assam, that feeds on the castor-oil plant, etc., and forms usually orange-red cocoons. 2. The silk produced by this worm; castor silk. e'ri†.

E'ri-an, 1 ī'rɪ-ən; 2 ē'ri-an, a. Geol. Of or pertaining to the upper group of the Middle Devonian series of strata as developed in New York State, or to the corresponding geologic age.— E'ri-an, n. Geol. See table under GEOLOGY.

er'ic¹, 1 er'ɪk; 2 ĕr'ic, n. 1. The murderer's blood-fine required by old Irish law to be paid to the family of the murdered.

> Almost every page of the translations contains a reference to the eric-fine for homicide.
> H. S. MAINE Early Hist. Institutions p. 32. [H. H. & CO. 1888.]

2. [Ir.] Same as EIRIC. [< Ir. eiric.] er'i-ach†; er'ick‡.

Er'ic², 1 er'ɪk; 2 ĕr'ic, n. 1. A masculine personal name. 2. Any one of several kings of Denmark and Sweden. 3. E. XIV. (⁹/₁₃1533–²/₂₆1577), King of Sweden; son of Gustavus Vasa, whom he succeeded in 1560; proposed marriage to Queen Elizabeth of England, and, being refused, wedded the daughter of a corporal; was deposed in 1568, and either died or was killed in prison. 4. SYN.: balk, blunder, bull, fallacy, falsity, fault, hallucination, mistake, oversight, slip, solecism, untruth. See TRESPASS.—ANT.: accuracy, certainty, correction, correctness, exactness, rectification, soundness, surety, truth.—PROP.: an error in the total; in opinion; an error of judgment; an error by oversight.—accidental e. (Astron.), a spatial and astronomical observations, a possible minute error arising from the imperfection of the observer's senses, the effect of heat, cold, or other agents upon his instruments, or other unavoidable causes. This error may be reduced by taking the mean of several repetitions of the observation under the same conditions.—assignment of e. (Law), a specification of the errors contained in the complaint, made by the plaintiff on a writ of error.—average e. (Psychophysics), see METHOD OF AVERAGE ERROR.—circular e. (Optics), one of the rings of a clock occasioned by irregularities in the extent of the arc described by the pendulum.—compensating errors (Math.), errors so nearly equivalent in degree and so nearly opposite in character that they counterbalance each other in ordinary computation.—constant e., an error due to the limitation of instruments, the personal equation, or other similar factors, which it is impossible to eliminate in the manner of an accidental error.—e. of a clock, the difference between the time as indicated by a clock and the actual time, whether mean or sidereal: expressed astronomically by the formula, T − t = e, where t is the clock-time and T the true time; thus the error of a clock which is five seconds ahead of the true time is indicated as + 5 seconds, and a similar error of slowness as − 5 seconds.—e. of adjustment (Surv.), an error arising from the faulty placing or assembling of a telescope or other instrument.—e. of closure (Surv.), the number found by dividing the distance by which a survey fails to close by the perimeter of the surveyed area.—e. of expectation (Psychophysics), in experiments regarding reaction-time, the acceleration or prolongation of a judgment due respectively to change or uniformity in the stimuli. These errors may be considerably reduced by repeating the stimuli in reversed order and taking the mean of the two sets of results.—e. of fatigue (Psychophysics), a change in the response to a stimulus which is retarded beyond the normal period by a condition of fatigue.—e. of habituation (Psychophysics), a change in the response to a stimulus delayed beyond the normal period, owing to the lack of sharp effect of the stimulus due to habituation to it.—e. of the mean square, same as mean square.—e. of the mode (Math.), the error expressed by the sum of the limits of error of the two or more quantities divided by the limit of error common to each.—Fechnerian time-e. (Psychophysics), a constant error due to the temporal arrangement of a judgment, and removed by performing two sets of experiments in reversed time-orders to each other and taking the mean of the two results.—gross e. (Psychophysics), the difference between the true value of an object of sense-observation and its value as determined by a single visual impression, as in the case of a straight line of a certain measured length.—law of error, the relation between the magnitude of a possible accidental error and its probability, as in measurements. The usual law is that small errors are more probable than larger ones, and that the probability of error of magnitude zero is the supposed error increases. law of frequency of e.; mean e. 1. The quantity whose square is the mean value of the squares of all possible errors, each multiplied a number of times proportional to its probability. mean square error. 2. The average error of a number of observations, as determined by taking the mean value of all the errors, both positive and negative, without regard to sign.—method of average e. see under METHOD.—probable e., a quantity such that the actual accidental error of any observation is as likely to exceed as to fall short of it.—residual e., the difference between the observed values of a given number of observations and their arithmetical mean.—space e. (Psychophysics), a constant error of observation due to conditions of spatial arrangement, which may be remedied by averaging the results of two series of experiments made with space conditions reversed.—station e. (Astron. & Geod.), the error arising from the location of a point as determined by geodetical survey and its location when computed by astronomical means; due to errors arising from local conditions of attraction, especially in mountainous regions and mining districts.—true e., the same as NORM, 2 (2).—writ of e., a judicial writ or order issued by a court of appellate jurisdiction to a court of subordinate jurisdiction directing that the record of a designated case be sent up to the superior court for review upon allegation and assignment of error therein; the procedure by which an appellate court may review the proceedings of an inferior court as to matters of law only, apparent on the face of the record, including exceptions filed.—er'ror-ful, a. Abounding in errors.—er'ror-ist, n. [Rare.] One who is inclined to error, or who propagates error.—-less, a.—-less-ness, n.

-se'ome, 1 ər-sī'əm; 2 ĕr-sē'əm, n. Zool. One of the two principal forms of siphonophorous colonies including a tentacled gastrozoid, a hydrophyllium, a nectocalyx, and a varying number of medusoid gonophores. [< Gr. ersē, dew.]

-sate', 1 er-sāt'; 2 ĕr-sāt', n. [G.] A reserve force of the German army composed of young men of 20, fit for service, but in excess of the number required for the annual contingent of recruits. e-ryc'i-nid, 1 ī-ris'i-nid; 2 ē-rĭc'ĭ-nĭd. I. a. Entom. Of or pertaining to the Erycinidæ. II. n. A mollusk or butterfly of the family Erycinidæ.

Er"y-ci'na-ce-æ, 1 er'i-si-nē'si-i; 2 ĕr'ĭ-sĭ-nā'sē-ē, n. pl. Conch. A family of equivalve bivalves with the mantle not reflected over the shell and the hinge-cartilage in an oblique groove, including small marine forms. 2. Entom. The Lycænidæ. [< Erycina (L. g.), < L. Eryx, < Gr. Erykinē, Venus, < Eryx, mountain in Sicily. See ERYCINA.]

e-ryc'i-noid, 1 ī-ris'i-noid; 2 ē-rĭc'ĭ-nŏid. a. Conch. Of or pertaining to the Erycinidæ. [< Erycina + -OID.]

er'y-gi'ti-a, n. Chem. Same as ERYTHRITE.

Er'y-man'thi-an, 1 er'i-man'thi-an; 2 ĕr'ĭ-măn'thĭ-an, a. Gr. Myth. Designating the wild boar which ravaged Erymanthus, a mountain chain in Arcadia, and became the slaughter of which was the fourth of twelve labors of Hercules.

E-ryn'gi-um, 1 e-rin'ji-um; 2 ē-rĭn'gĭ-ŭm, n. Bot. A large genus of prickly herbs of the parsley family with cut or prickly leaves, and blue or white flowers in dense heads closely sessile in dense heads. A few species are used in medicine, and others are cultivated for ornament. [< L. eryngion; see ERYNGO.]

e-ryn'go, 1 ī-rin'go; 2 ē-rĭn'gō, n. Any one of various coarse herbs of the genus Eryngium. [< L. eryngion, < Gr. Eryngion, dim. of Eryngos, eryngo.] e-ryn'gust.

Er"y-on'i-dæ, 1 er'i-on'i-di; 2 ĕr'ĭ-ŏn'ĭ-dē, n. pl. Zool. A family of astacoideans having a broad carapace with serrated margins, no rostrum, and anterior antennæ with two many-jointed flagella. Er'y-on, (L. g.) Er'y-o-nus, ppr. eryōn, draw.] Er"y-on'i-dæ†.—Er"y-on'id, *n.—Er"y-on'oid, a.

Er"y-si'be, 1 er'i-sai'bi; 2 ĕr'ĭ-sī'bē, n. Bot. A large genus of widely distributed fungi—the mildews—belonging to the class of ascomycetes. Their mode of reproduction is peculiar. The oogonium develops into a row of cells, and one cell becoming the ascogonium and giving off ascogenous hyphæ. A white mycelium formed on the surface of plants is a characteristic of all the species. [< Gr. erysibē, mildew.]

E-rys'i-mum, 1 ī-ris'i-mum; 2 ē-rĭs'ĭ-mŭm, n. Bot. A large genus of herbaceous annuals and biennials, natives of the north temperate zone, belonging to the family Brassicaceæ and are distinguished by yellow flowers, with broadly lobed stigma, and by linear, 4-sided pods. E. chiranthoides is the wormseed-mustard and E. asperrum the Western wallflower. [L., < Gr. erysimon, hedge-mustard.]

er"y-sip'e-las, 1 er'i-sip'i-las; 2 ĕr'ĭ-sĭp'ē-lăs, n. 1. Pathol. An inflammatory specific disease, usually confined to the skin, but sometimes extending to the subjacent connective tissue, and accompanied by fever; Saint Anthony's fire. See plate of BACTERIA. 2. Veter. An infectious disease of swine, characterized by marked reddening of the skin, rise of temperature, and cerebral disturbances. It occurs in the adult stage and is caused by a bacterium. [< F. érysipèle, < L. erysipelas, <

Gr. erystpelas, < erythros, red, + pella, skin.] er"ĭ-sip'e-las†.—er"y-sip-e-las'tic, a. Erysipelatous.—er"y-si-pel'a-toid, a. Resembling erysipelas.—er"y-si-pel'a-tous, a. Med. Pertaining to or of the nature of erysipelas; affected with erysipelas. er"y-sip'e-lous‡.—er"y-sip'e-loid, n. Pathol. An erysipelatous disease, without marked fever, proceeding from putrid infection of a wound.

Er"y-si-pha'ce-æ, n. [< er'i-sə-fē'si-i; 2 ĕr"y-si-fā'ce-ē, n. pl. Bot. A family of ascomycetous, parasitic fungi — the powdery mildews — forming mycelia or cobwebby spread the leaves of their hosts, suggesting patches of chalk-powder, and send haustoria into the leaf's epidermal cells. Reproduction is effected in summer, by short-lived but quickly germinating conidia. Several destructive genera belong to this family. [< Gr. erysi- = erythros, red, + siphōn, tube.] Er"y-siph'e-æ‡.—er"y-si-pha'ceous, a.

Er-eryth'a-cus, n. Ornith. Same as ERITHACUS.

er"y-than'the-ma, 1 er"i-than'thi-mə; 2 ĕr"y-thăn'-the-ma, n. Pathol. A red cutaneous rash due to disturbance of the vasomotor nerves. [< Gr. erythros, red, + anthema, flowering.]

Er-y-the'a, 1 er"i-thī'ə; 2 ĕr-y-thē'a, n. A small genus of tall fan palms of southern California, having naked trunks, fan-shaped plicate, filiferous leaves, and flowers solitary or in clusters. [< L. Erythea, island where Geryon dwelt.]

er"y-the'ma, 1 er"i-thī'mə; 2 ĕr"y-thē'ma, n. Pathol. I. A superficial skin-disease characterized by abnormal redness, but without swelling or fever. 2. Abnormal redness of the cheek in hectic fever. [< Gr. erythēma, < erythros, red.]—polymorphic erythema, a form of erythema characterized by eruptions resulting in papules, vesicles, or pustules in various shapes.—er"y-the-mat'ic, a. Relating to or partaking of erythema.

er"y-them'a-tous‡.—er"y-them'a-toid, a. Resembling erythema.

Er"y-thræ, 1 er"i-thrī; 2 ĕr"y-thrē n. An ancient Ionian city in Asia Minor where dwelt the sibyl Herophile.—Er"y-thræ'an. 1. a. Of or pertaining to Erythræ. II. n. The sibyl of Erythræ.

Er"y-thræ'a, 1 er"i-thrī'ə; 2 ĕr"y-thrē'a, n. Bot. A considerable genus of low annual herbs of the gentian family with opposite sessile leaves and clusters of rose-purple or reddish flowers. E. centaurium is the centaury of Europe. [< Gr. erythraia, f. of erythratos, red.]

er"y-thran, 1 er"i-thran; 2 ĕr"y-thrăn, n. Chem. A colorless liquid compound ($C_{20}H_{22}O_{10}$) from which erythrite by protracted boiling with diluted sulfuric acid.

er"y-thrar'sin, 1 er"i-thrär'sin; 2 ĕr"y-thrär'sin, n. A red pigment ($C_6H_3O_4As_2$) arising from the oxidation of cacodyl. See table under RED. [< ERYTHRO- + ARSENIC.]

er"y-thras'ma, 1 er"i-thraz'mə; 2 ĕr"y-thrăş'ma, n. Pathol. A contagious skin-disease due to parasitic irritation occurring in duplicatures of the skin, as in the groin and armpits. [< Gr. erythros.]

er"y-thre'an, 1 er"i-thrī'ən; 2 ĕr"y-thrē'an, a. Red. [< L. erythræus, < Gr. erythraios, red.]—the Erythrean sea, in the geography of the ancients, the same originally applied to the whole expanse of sea between Africa and India, including the Red Sea together with the Persian Gulf; afterward restricted to the Red Sea.

er"y-thre"mo-me-lal'gi-a, n. Med. Same as ERYTHROMELALGIA.

er-yth'ric, 1 ə-rith'rik; 2 e-ryth'ric, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from erythrin. [< Gr. erythros, red.]—erythric acid, same as ERYTHRIN, 1.

e-ryth'rin, 1 ə-rith'rin; 2 e-ryth'rin, n. 1. Chem. A crystalline compound ($C_{20}H_{10}O_{10}$) contained in various lichens, as Rocella tinctoria, from which it is extracted by milk of lime. 2. Mineral. Same as ERYTHRITE, 1.

e-ryth'rine‡.—er"y-thrin'ic, a.

Er"y-thri'na, 1 er"i-thrī'nə; 2 ĕr"y-thrī'na, n. Bot. A notable genus of mostly tropical trees or shrubs of the family Fabaceæ, with trifoliolate leaves and naked racemes of bright-red flowers. Several species known as coralitrees are in ornamental cultivation. [< erythros, red.]

Er"y-thrin'i-dæ, 1 er"i-thrin'i-dē; 2 ĕr"y-thrin'i-dē, n. pl. Ich. The Erythrinitæ as a family. [< ERYTHRINUS.]

Er"y-thri'ni-tæ, n. pl. Ich. Same as ERYTHRINOIDEI.

E-ryth'ri-nine, 1 ə-rith'ri-nin; 2 e-ryth'ri-nīn, n. pl. Ich. A subfamily or group of characinoid fishes, especially those without an adipose dorsal fin and without posterior cephalic cresta. Er"y-thri'nus, n. [< Gr. erythrinos, red mullet, < erythros, red.] E-ryth'ri-nu'sa.—e-ryth'ri-nine, a. & n.

e-ryth'rism, 1 ə-rith'rizm; 2 e-ryth'rişm, n. Morbid fondness for red; abnormal or excessive redness, especially when exhibited by certain dichromatic birds, as the screech-owl (Scops asio), which has two distinct plumages—brown, one gray, and the other red. [< Gr. erythros, red.]—er"y-thris'mal, a. Of, pertaining to, or exhibiting erythrism.

e-ryth'rite, 1 ə-rith'rit; 2 e-ryth'rit, n. 1. Mineral. (1) A crimson and peach-red, resembling asbestos, hydrous cobalt arsenate ($Co_3As_2O_8 + 8H_2O$), found crystallized in the monoclinic system and also earthy. (2) A flesh-red orthoclase. 2. Chem. A crystalline compound contained in certain lichens; used in Bright's disease. e-ryth'ri-tol‡. [< Gr. erythros, red.]—er"y-thrit'ic, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or containing erythrite. 2. Erythrismal.

e-ryth'ro-, 1 ə-rith'rō-; 2 e-ryth'ro-, comb. form Greek erythros, red: a combining form.—e-ryth'ro-ben'zene, n. Chem. A red dye derived from nitrobenzene.—e-ryth'ro-blast, n. One of the colorless cells from which the red corpuscles of the blood are believed to be developed: found in the red marrow of bones.—e-ryth'ro-blas'tic, a.—e-ryth'ro-cal'cite, n. Min. A blue hydrated copper chlorid that is found in fibrous aggregates at Vesuvius.—e-ryth'ro-car'pous, a. Bot. Having red fruit, as certain lichens.—e-ryth'ro-cen-tau'rin, n. Chem. A crystalline compound ($C_{27}H_{30}O_{16}$) resembling santonin, contained in the common centaury.—e-ryth'ro-chro'ic, a. 1. Of or pertaining to erythrism. 2. Exhibiting erythrism or abnormal redness, as certain owls.—e-ryth'ro-chro'ism, n.—e-ryth'ro-cyte, n. A. A red blood-corpuscule.—e-ryth'ro-cyt'ic, a.—e-ryth'ro-cy-tol'y-sis, n. Med. Dissolution of the protoplasm of the red blood-corpuscles.—e-ryth'ro-cy-to-ly'tic, a.—e-ryth'ro-cy-tom'e-ter, n. A device for counting erythrocytes.—e-ryth'ro-cy'tor-rhex'is, n. Rupture of a red blood-corpuscle.—e-ryth'ro-cy-to'sis, n. The act or process of dividing red blood-corpuscle.—e-ryth'ro-cy-to'sis, n. Med. The formation of red blood-corpuscles.—e-ryth'ro-der"ma-ti'tis, n. A bright-red cutaneous inflammation.—e-ryth'ro-dex'trin, n. Chem. A variety of dextrin that gives a red-brown color with iodin. e-ryth'ro-dex'trine‡.

e-ryth'ro-gen, 1 ə-rith'ro-jen; 2 e-ryth'ro-ĝen, n. Chem. 1. A fatty crystalline compound contained in diseased bile and reddened by nitric acid or ammonia. 2. A substance found in fibrous, probably a chromogen, colorable red by acids. 3. Carbon disulfid: so named from the red compounds it forms. 4. An erythrolitmic compound contained in putrid blood. [< ERYTHRO- + -GEN.]

e-ryth'ro-gen'ic, a. Physiol. 1. Causing or exciting a red color-sensation. 2. Producing red blood-corpuscles.—e-ryth'ro-gla'cin, n. Chem. Same as ERYTHRITE.—e-ryth'ro-gran'u-lose, n. Chem. A variety of granulose that is colored red by iodin.—er'y-throid, a. Reddish, or red.—er'y-throl, n. Chem. Same as ERYTHRITE.—e-ryth'ro-le'ic, a. Chem. Of or pertaining to red oily compounds.—erythroleic acid, a purple semifluid compound said to exist in orchil.—e-ryth'ro-le'in, n. Chem. A purplish-red oily compound contained in litmus.—e-ryth'ro-le'ine‡.—e-ryth'ro-lit'min, n. Chem. A deep-red crystalline compound contained in litmus.—e-ryth'ro-lit'mine.—e-ryth'ro-lit'mi-ne, n. Physiol. A red pigment which is especially active against the red corpuscles of the blood.—er"y-throl'y-sis, n. Same as ERYTHROCYTOLYSIS.—e-ryth'ro-man'nite, n. Chem. Same as ERYTHRITE.—e-ryth'ro-me-lal'gi-a, n. Pathol. A nervous disease of the extremities, characterized by persistent redness on the soles of the feet, palms of the hands, with burning pain.—e-ryth'ro-me'li-a‡.

Er"y-thro'ni-um, 1 er"i-thrō'ni-əm; 2 ĕr"y-thrō'ni-ŭm, n. 1. Bot. A small mainly North-American genus of vernal-flowering nearly stemless herbs of the lily family, with two smooth, shining, flat leaves and a naked scape bearing one or several nodding yellow, purple, or white flowers. A common name for one of this genus is dog's-tooth violet or adder's-tongue. 2. [e-] Chem. Vanadium: formerly so called because of its red acid. [< Gr. erythronion, q. v.] e-ryth'ro-phage, n. Physiol. A phagocyte destructive of red blood-corpuscles.—er"y-throph'i-lous, a. Embryol. Tending to take the stain of erythrosin; applied to certain protoplasm.—e-ryth'ro-phil'ic, a.—e-ryth'ro-phile‡, n. Chem. A colorless crystalline alkaloid contained in sassy-bark.—e-ryth'ro-pho-bi'a, n. Med. An aversion to a red color as shown by a cow, especially after operation for cataract.—e-ryth'ro-phyl, n. Chem. The red coloring-matter of leaves, fruits, and flowers. Compare CHLOROPHYL.

e-ryth'ro-phyl'lin‡.—e-ryth'ro-phy'to-scope, n. Same as ERYTHRO-SCOPE.—e-ryth'ro-plate, n. Photog. An orthochromatic plate made by treating with erythrosin.

An Escalator. (Sectional view) er"y-throp'si-a, 1 er"i-throp'si-ə; 2 ĕr"y-thrŏp'si-a, n. Ophthal. A disorder of the eye or eyes in which all objects appear red: sometimes due to a prolonged exposure to the bright light of snow or subsequent to operation upon the crystalline lens. er"y-thro'pi-a‡.

e-ryth'ro-scope, 1 ə-rith'rō-skōp; 2 e-ryth'ro-scōp, n. An optical device by which the blue plate, one cobalt-blue and the other deep-yellow, so absorb some rays and transmit others that the colors of objects are apparently changed, green leaves showing as red, while the effects of light and shade remain.

e'ry-throse, n. Chem. A saccharydrate ($C_6H_{12}O_6$), derived from erythrite by oxidation.—e-ryth'ro-sid'er-ite, n. Mineral. A red, very soluble, hydrous potassium ferric chlorid ($2KCl.Fe_2Cl_6.2H_2O$), crystallizing in the orthorhombic system.—e-ryth'ro-sin, n. Chem. 1. A red compound obtained from tyrosin by oxidation, as with nitric acid. 2. A red coloring-matter derived from certain coal-tar iodin on fluorescein.—erythrosin plates, see ERYTHROPLATE.—er"y-thro'sis, n. Pathol. Arterial plethora or congestion.—er"y-thris'mus, n. An aggregate term for the blushing and raspberry.—e-ryth'ro-tox'in, n. A specific cytotoxin destructive of the erythrocytes. See CYTOTOXIN.

Er"y-throx'y-la'ce-æ, 1 er"i-throks'i-lē'si-i; 2 ĕr"y-throks"y-lā'ce-ē, n. pl. Bot. A family of tropical American shrubs and trees of the order Geraniales with alternate stipulate leaves, small axillary cymes, and drupaceous one-seeded fruits.—er"y-throx'y-la'ceous, a.

er"y-throx'y-lin, 1 er"i-throks'i-lin; 2 ĕr"y-throks'y-lin, n. Chem. Same as COCAIN.

Er"y-throx'y-lum, 1 er"i-throks'i-ləm; 2 ĕr"y-throks'y-lŭm, n. Bot. A large genus of tropical American shrubs and small trees typical of the family Erythroxylaceæ. They have alternate stipulate leaves in small whitish or green cymes, flowers on axillary peduncles. Several species are of great economic value: E. coca supplies the coca of commerce. [< MNGREK. < Gr. erythros, red, + xylon, wood.]

e-ryth'ro-zinc'ite, n. Mineral. A red zinc-manganese sulfid ($Zn.MnS$), that crystallizes in the hexagonal system and is probably a variety of wurtzite; found in Siberia.

e-ryth'ro-zym, n. Chem. Same as ERYTHRO-GEN, 2. A ferment contained in madder-root, through the agency of which the red coloring-matter alizarin is produced from rubian.—e-ryth'ro-zy-mo'sis, n. Fermentation.

er"y-thu-ri'a, 1 er"i-thū-rī'ə; 2 ĕr"y-thu-rī'a, n. Same as Erz'ber-ger, 1 ərts'ber-gər; 2 ĕrts'bĕr-ger, Matthias (1875–1921). German statesman, Vice-Chancellor of German Republic; signer of Armistice, Nov. 11, 1918; assassinated.

Erze'rum, 1 erz'rūm; 2 ĕrz'rum, n. 1. A vilayet in Armenia; 19,686 sq. m. 2. Its capital, an ancient fortified city.

Erz'ge-bir"ge, 1 ərts'gə-bir"gə; 2 ərts'gə-bir"ĝe, n. A mountain range between Saxony and Bohemia; length 120 m.; highest point 4,500 ft.

Erz-her'zog, 1 ərts'her-tsōg; 2 ĕrts'hĕr'tsŏg, n. [G.] Archduke.—Erz-her'zo-gin, n. Archduchess.

Er"zin-gan', 1 er"zin-gän'; 2 ĕr'zin-gän', n. A town in Armenia.

Escapements.

1. Recoil escapement. 2. Dead-beat escapement. 3. Lantern-wheel escapement. 4. Lever escapement. 5. Pin-wheel escapement. 6. Ring escapement. 7. Four-legged gravity escapement. 8. Crown-tooth escapement.

securing uniformity in rate of movement of the time-train. Ordinarily it consists of two principal members, an escape-wheel and a detent or lock, through which periodical impulses are imparted to the pendulum or balance-wheel to keep it in oscillation, and to which, in turn, motion is imparted by the return movement of the balance-wheel or pendulum. These alternate motions of the locking member serve to arrest and release the escape-wheel at uniform intervals, thus governing the progressive movement of the time-train connected with it. Varieties of escapement are named (1) from the timepiece, chronometer-escapement, clock-e., watch-e.; (2) from the form or position of some part; as, anchor e. or lever e. (having the locking arms or pallets on an anchor-shaped place), cylinder or horizontal e. (in which a section of a cylinder, whose axis is the same as that of the balance-wheel, forms the pallets, which engage directly with the teeth of the escape-wheel), detached e. (having the balance detached from the escapement), double-roller e. (a lever escapement bearing two rollers of different sizes), duplex e. (in which the escape-wheel has two series of teeth, locking, and impulse, one imparting the impulse), recoil e. (as in case of the vertical and anchor escapement), resilient e. (in which the banking pin of a lever escapement are made of springs), three- or four-legged e. (in which three or four long escape-teeth are used), two-pin e. (in which two small pins are used in place of the larger impulse-pin in forms of the lever escapement), vertical crown, crown-wheel, or verge e. (in which the plane of the escape-wheel is at a right angle to that of the train-wheels); (3) from the character of the impulse: as, dead-beat or dead e. (in which there is no reverse motion of the escape-wheel), electric e. (in which an electric impulse at regular intervals of time arrests the escape-wheel and holds it in readiness for taking the place of a pendulum), Graham or drum e. (in which only one single-beat escapement is utilized in clocks having a drum shape), gravity e. (in which impulse is imparted by the fall of a weight against the pendulum), half-dead e. (in which the escape-wheel has a slight reverse motion), pin-pallet e. (in which the impulse is received by two roundish pallet-stones, as in French clocks, resembling the Graham escapement), recoil e. (in which the character of the lock causes recoil of the escape-wheel), remontoir e. (in which a supplementary source of power wound by the principal train moves the escape-wheel), single-beat e. (in which only alternate oscillations of the pendulum or balance correspond with a movement of the escape-wheel: the chronometer and duplex escapement are examples); (4) from the character of the escape-wheel; as, lantern-wheel e., pin-wheel e.

It was the great Dutch philosopher, Christian V. Huyghens, to whom we are indebted for the invention (in 1656) of the clock-escapement, by means of which the pendulum is made to perform its proper function as a time-keeper.

4. Law. The degree, nature, and quantity of interest to which one is lawfully entitled as to the ownership or use of property; the rights held by one in regard to things; as, an absolute estate; a conditional estate. Estates are classified in accordance with their quantity and duration; as, estates of freehold, including fee simple, fee tail, and life estates; and estates not of freehold, embracing tenancies for years, tenancies at will, and tenancies at sufferance; besides a modern form of estate known as estate from year to year, the these latter should not be classed as estates.

An estate in lands, tenements, and hereditaments, signifies such interest as the tenant has therein.
BLACKSTONE Commentaries p. 103.

5. A class or order of persons having a certain political standing or state of existence in the government; represented in the government; also, in the plural, a legislative assembly composed of representatives of these classes. In most countries of Christendom there have been or are three estates, with the exception of Sweden and Norway, where there were four, viz.: the nobles, clergy, burghers, and peasants; and the nobility, equestrian order, representatives of cities, and clergy respectively. The estates in England originally were composed of the clergy, the barons and knights, and the commons, but ultimately the following arrangement obtained: lords spiritual, lords temporal, and commons. The original form of words used in Parliament practise to designate the lords spiritual and temporal collectively; hence, popularly there are but two estates, the lords and the commons. The three estates in France were the clergy, nobles, and townsmen, the latter the famous tiers état which assumed supreme control and precipitated the great revolution of the last decade of the 18th century. The previous to 1428, the three estates consisted of the prelates, the tenants-in-chief, and the townsmen.

In the earlier parliaments, . . . each of the four orders of clergy, barons, knights, and burgesses met, deliberated, and made their grants apart from each other. This isolation, however, of the estates soon showed signs of breaking down.
GREEN Short Hist. Eng. People p. 247. [BL. 1875.]

6. [Archaic or Poet.] Pomp or outward display; grandeur. 7†. One of high rank; a noble. 8†. A state or commonwealth; a country, realm, or state.

II. i. [Rare.] 1. To have a high opinion; feel respect or liking. 2. To make an estimate; consider. [< F. estimer, < L. æstimo, value.] es-team'ŧ; es-teme'ŧ.

SYN.: calculate, consider, deem, estimate, hold, regard, think, value. Esteem is less precise and mercantile than calculate or estimate. We esteem a jewel precious; we estimate it to be worth so much money. This sense of esteem is now chiefly found in literature or oratorical style, and in certain conventional phrases; as, I esteem it an honor, a favor. In popular usage esteem expresses a union of respect and kindly feeling. See also ESTIMATE; APPRECIATE; LIKE.— es-teem'abl(e), a.— es-teem'er, n.

es-teem', n. 1. Favorable opinion or estimation on the basis of worth, especially that based on moral characteristics; respect; regard.

Friendship is no plant of hasty growth,
Though rooted in esteem's deep soil.
JOANNA BAILLIE De Monfort act iii, sc. 2.

2. Character that commands respect or consideration; estimableness; as, a person of esteem. 3. [Archaic.] Estimation or judgment of merit or demerit; opinion; estimation. 4†. Estimated value; the value found by estimate, regard, respect. Esteem for a person is a favorable opinion on the basis of worth, especially of moral worth, linked with a feeling of interest and kindly regard for the person. Regard for a person is the mental view or feeling that springs from a sense of his value, excellence, or superiority, with a cordial and hearty friendliness. Estimate has more of calculation; as, my estimate of the man, of his abilities, is very high. Estimation involves the idea of calculation or appraisal with that of esteem or regard, and is especially used of the feeling entertained by numbers of people as, he stood high in public estimation. Compare ATTACHMENT, FRIENDSHIP; LOVE; REGARD.

Æsthetics is the term now employed to designate the theory of the Fine Arts—the science of the beautiful, with its allied conceptions and emotions. The province of the science is not . . . very definitely fixed. SULLY in Encyc. Brit. 9th ed., vol. i, p. 212.

The word esthetics now denotes more strictly etymological significance as the science and theory of sense or sensibility; Kant objected to its use as confined to the doctrine of the beautiful, and especially otherwise; while Hegel used the term "Ästhetik," to characterise his treatise on the fine arts, only with reluctance. Since Hegel's time, however, and in a measure due to his influence, the use introduced by Baumgarten has become accepted quite generally.

Etch"e-min'-ian,] ech"ē-min'ī-en; 2 ĕch"ē-mĭn'ī-ȧn, n. An extensive geological division of the early Paleozoic rocks of E. Canada, lying at the base of the Cambrian, above the Huronian, and characterized by the presence of worm-tubes, phyllocarids and other small inferior crustaceans, having brachiopods, and perhaps Olenellus. [< Etchemin, river in Canada.]—Etch"e-min'-ian, a.

etch'ing,] ech'iṅ; 2 ĕch'ĭng, n. 1. A process of engraving in which the incised lines are produced by the biting of an acid or mordant. The surface of the metal is covered with a thin coat of wax, asphaltum, or varnish, which is scratched with the needle wherever lines are desired, and the exposed part subjected to the action of the corrosive acid. Etching is sometimes used in combination with line-engraving, the design being first etched and then finished with the burin. 2. A picture or print formed by etching; an etched plate. 3. An impression from an etched plate.—calligraphic etching, a process of etching in which the drawing is done with pen and ink on a clean copper plate. The plate or design when dry is covered with a thin etching-ground or varnish, smoked and then soaked in water to soften the ink, which can then be removed with the varnish by gentle rubbing, leaving the design to be bitten in as usual.—daguerreotype e., a photochemical process for biting in the dark places of a sensitized plate.—mezzotint e., An aq. and, as of wax or varnish, used in etching. See ETCHING-GROUND.—e.-figures, n. pl. Figures produced on the surface of a crystal by a solvent, valuable as indications of crystallographic axes.—e.-ground, n. The coating of wax or varnish on a plate prepared for etching. e.-varnish‡.—e.-knife, n. A tool with which an etcher corrects faults in a plate or modifies the effect.—e.-needle, n. The needle-like steel implement used by etchers for tracing the lines through the ground. e.-point‡.—e.-stile, n. See GRAVING-TOOLS, etc., under ENGRAVING.—e.-tub, n. The receptacle in which, after etching, immerses his plate in the mordant.—typographic e., same as GLYPHOGRAPHY.—zinc e., same as ZINCOGRAPH.

Etch"mi'a-dzin,] ech"mī'ȧ-dzĭn, n. A ham-et'chmi-a-zin,] let in Transcaucasia; ecclesiastical capital of Armenia, and the residence of the Catholicos. Ech"mi-ad'zin‡.

etch'y, a. Etchlike. S. S.

E-te'o-cles, 1 ī-tī'o-klīz; 2 ē-tē'o-klēs, n. Gr. Myth. A son of Œdipus and Jocasta, who with his brother Polynices ruled Thebes after their father's plight. In a war to restore Polynices, whom Eteocles had exiled, the brothers slew each other. See SEVEN AGAINST THEBES.

E-te'o-clus,] ī-tī'o-klus; 2 e-tē'o-clȧs, n. Gr. Myth. Hippomedon, one of the Seven (heroes) against Thebes; an alternative name.

Et"e-o-cre'tan, 1 et'ī-o-krī'tan; 2 ĕt'ē-o-crē'tan, n. 1. One of the aboriginal inhabitants of Crete. 2. The language of this people. [< Gr. Eteokrētes.] Et"e-o-cre'tic.—Et"e-o-cre'tan, a. Et"e-o-cre'tic.

Et'eocretan inscription (from Prasso, in the interior of Crete) only date from the sixth to the fourth centuries B.C. respectively, but the fact that Prasso was the centre of the people whom classical writers call the "Eteocretans," calls the "Eteo"—or pure—Cretans, makes it certain that we are here dealing with a language that was spoken there before the end of the Bronze Age.

et"e-o-pol'y-mor'phism, n. [Rare.] True polymorphism. [C.] et"e-os'tic, a. [Rare.] Same as CHRONOGRAM. et"e-os'tichon‡.

e-te'ri-o, n. Bot. Same as ETERIO.

e-ter'mi-na-ble†, a. Interminable; eternal.

e-ter'nal, 1 ī-tûr'nal; 2 ē-tẽr'nal, a. 1. Having neither beginning nor end of existence; from everlasting to everlasting; timeless; infinite; as, the eternal God.

Having no end; that will endure forever; everlasting; as, eternal life.

Yet, sometimes glimpses on my sight,
Through present wrong, the eternal right.
WHITTIER Chapel of Hermits st. 11.

3. Having no beginning; having always existed; infinite in past duration; as, eternal Deity. 4. Independent of time or its conditions, or of the things that are perishable; unchangeable; immutable; also, of or pertaining to eternity; not temporal; as, eternal truths.

Causes and effects are arrangements, each the condition of the world. DARWINISM Pan Vobiscum p. 53. [c. r. 1890.]

5. Appearing interminable; perpetual; incessant: often implying weariness or disgust. [< OF. eternal, < L. æternalis, < æternus, < ævum, age.] e-ter'nal‡ [Archaic].

e-ter'nal†;] e-terne'‡ [Archaic]; e-ter'neel'‡.

Syn.: deathless, endless, everlasting, ever-living, fadeless, immortal, imperishable, interminable, never-ending, never-failing, perennial, perpetual, unceasing, unending, undying, unending, unfading, unfailing, without end. Eternal strictly signifies without beginning or end, in which sense it applies to God alone; everlasting implies duration that will not have had beginning, but can never cease; eternal is also used in this more limited sense; endless, without end, in its utmost reach, is not distinguishable from everlasting; but endless is commonly used in inferior senses, especially in mechanics, as in the phrases an endless screw, an endless chain. Everlasting and endless are both used in a limited sense of protracted, indefinite, but not infinite duration; as, the everlasting hills; endless debates; so we speak of interminable quarrels. Eternal holds quite strictly to the vast and sacred meaning in which it is applied to the Divine Being and the future state. Everlasting, endless, and eternal may be applied to that which has no life; as, everlasting chains, endless night, eternal death; immortal applies to that which now has life, and is forever exempt from death. Timeless carries, perhaps, the fullest idea of eternal, as above and beyond time, and not to be measured by it.

—eternal generation (Theol.), the doctrine that the Son in the Trinity has been from all eternity in that relation to the Father.—the E. City, Rome.—e-ter'nal-ism, n. [Rare.] 1. Eternalness. 2. The doctrine of the eternal nature of matter.—e-ter'nal-ist, n. One who holds that matter is eternal.—e"ter-nal'i-ty, n. Eternalness. e"ter-nal'i-ties, pl. Eternal truths.—e-ter'nal-ize, vt. To make eternal or endless; perpetuate; immortalize.—e-ter'nal-ly, adv. Without beginning or end; throughout eternity; forever; hence, perpetually; incessantly.—e-ter'nal-ness, n. The quality or state of being eternal. e-ter'neist.

e-ter'nal, n. 1. One who or that which is eternal. 2†. Eternity.—the Eternal, God.

Israel's Eternal was the Eternal which says, 'To depart from evil, that is understanding!' Be ye holy, for I am holy!'

MATTHEW ARNOLD Literature and Dogma p. 58. [c. & co. 1873.]

e-ter'ni-fy†, vt. To make eternal.

e-ter'ni-ty, 1 ī-tûr'nī-ti; 2 ē-tẽr'nī-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tiz, pl.] 1. Infinite duration or infinite existence independent of time, and having neither beginning nor end, past nor future.

Written on thy works I read The lesson of thy own eternity.
BRYANT Forest Hymn st. 3.

2. Endless time; infinite future duration.

One lamp — thy mother's love — amid the stars
Shall . . . burn through eternity.
N. P. WILLIS Rizpah with her Sons st. 6.

3. Time without beginning; infinite duration in the past.

God having, out of his mere good pleasure, from all eternity, elected some to everlasting life, did enter into a covenant of grace.
Westminster Shorter Catechism ans. XX.

4. Unending existence beyond the present life. 5. That which is eternal or immortal. 6. Any indefinitely vast or apparently endless stretch of time or space, or of objects or events as occupying time or space; as, an eternity of rocks and sand. 7. Philos. (1) That which is unrelated to or unlimited by time; that which transcends all that is temporal. (2) Timelessness. [< F. éternité, < L. æternita(t)-s, < æternus; see ETERNAL.]

æ-ter'ni-tet; e-tern'‡ [Archaic]; e-ter'ne'ness†.

E-ter'nia,] ē-tẽr'nȧ, n. A town on the Inland or the Saguenay river, Quebec, Canada; 1,899 ft. high.

e-ter'nize,] ī-tûr'nīz; 2 ē-tẽr'nīz, vt. [-NIZED'; -NIZ'ING.]

e-ter'nise,] I. To make eternal. 2. To prolong or cause to exist indefinitely; perpetuate. 3. To perpetuate the fame of; immortalize.

My verse your virtues rare shall eternize. SPENSER Sonnets lxxv.

e-te'sian, 1 ī-tī'zhan; 2 ē-tē'zhȧn, a. Recurring yearly; annually periodical: said especially of those dry northwest winds that prevail over the Ægean sea and the Mediterranean region during the dog-days.

Those etesian gales or annual monsoons, which brought in his periodical scourge, would have been justly hailed by me as the harbingers of a triumph in reversion. De QUINCEY Essays on Philosophical Writers, Parr in vol. p. 164. [r. & r. 1856.]

é"tê"té',] ā"tē"tē'; 2 ę"tę"tę', a. [F.] Her. Headless; having the head torn off; as, a beast or bird ête'.

Eth, 1 eth; 2 ĕth, n. An Anglo-Saxon consonant, corresponding generally with th as in the: distinguished from th in thorn. See EDH.

-eth, suffix. Used in forming the third person singular of the present indicative of verbs; as walk*eth*. [< AS. -eth, -ath.]

eth'al, 1 eth'ȧl or ī'thȧl; 2 ēth'ȧl or ē'thȧl, n. Chem. Cetyl alcohol. See CETYL. [< eth- (in ALCOHOL) + al- (in ALCOHOL).]

eth-al'de-hyde, 1 eth-al'dē-hīd; 2 ĕth-ăl'dę-hȳd, n. Chem. Acetic aldehyde (CH_3CHO). [< ETHER + ALDEHYDE.]

E'than, 1 ī'than; 2 ē'thăn, n. Bib. 1 Kings xvi, 20.

eth'an-al, 1 eth'an-al; 2 ĕth'ăn-ăl, n. Chem. Acetaldehyde. [< ETHANE + ALDEHYDE.] [TON.

Eth'an-dun', 1 eth'an-dun'; 2 ĕth'ăn-dụn', n. See EDING-eth'ane, 1 eth'ēn; 2 ēth'ān, n. Chem. A colorless gaseous compound (C_2H_6) of the paraffin series, obtained by the gases given off by petroleum and in illuminating-gas; dimethyl. [< ETHER.]

Eth'a-nim,] ē'thȧ-nim; 2 ēth'ȧ-nĭm, n. [Heb.] The seventh Hebrew month; Tisri. See CALENDAR.

eth'an-ol, 1 eth'an-ol or -nol; 2 ĕth'ăn-ŏl or -nōl, n. Chem. Ethyl alcohol. [< ETHANE + -OL.]

eth'a-no-yl, 1 eth'a-no-il; 2 ĕth'ȧ-no-ȳl, n. Chem. Acetyl [< ETHANE + -YL.] [2 Esd. xiv, 24.

e'ther, 1 ī'ther, 2 ē'ther, n. 1. Chem. (1) A colorless, mobile, volatile, pleasant-smelling liquid compound ($C_2H_5OC_2H_5$) made by the action of sulfuric acid on alcohol. sulfuric ether.

It is a solvent of fats, resins, etc., and is an anesthetic, safer than chloroform. The officinal ether of the United States Pharmacopœia is composed of about 96 per cent. of absolute ether and about 4 per cent. of alcohol. The antidotes for ether are ammonia, digitalis, oxygen.

(2) Any one of a class of hydrocarbon compounds derived from alcohols by the substitution of a compound radical for the hydrogen atom in hydroxyl, including the above-named (see def. (1)), which is derived in this way from ethyl alcohol ($C_2H_5.OH$).

According as the hydrogen of the hydroxyl is replaced by the radicals of various alcohols, as methyl, ethyl, propyl, cetyl, and glyceryl, ethers are called methylic, ethylic, propylic, cetylic, glycerin, etc. Ethers are simple, mixed, or compound: simple when the substituting radical is identical with the alcohol, as $C_2H_5O.C_2H_5$ (ethyl ether); mixed when they are different, as $C_2H_5O.CH_3$ (ethyl methyl ether); compound when the substituting radical is an acid radical, which reacts with the alcohol radical to form a salt which is called also an ester.

2. Phys. Sci. A supposed medium filling all space, through which, in the form of transverse wave-motion, radiant energy of all kinds, including light-waves, is propagated. This medium, whose existence most modern authorities consider to be established, is thought to be more elastic than any ordinary form of matter, and to exist throughout all known space, even within the densest bodies. Electric and magnetic phenomena can be explained as due to strains and pulsations in the ether. luminiferous ether.

3. The upper air; the upper regions of the sky, or the atmosphere that fills them. 4. Philos. In ancient cosmology, a supposed fifth element that was believed to fill the heavens above the moon; a higher form of fire, of which the sun and stars were composed, or of air, breathed by the gods. [< L. æther, < Gr. aithēr, < aithō, burn.] æ'ther.— acetic ether, see under ACETIC. — Arans' e., ethylidene chlorid.— compound spirit of e., an anodyne mixture of ether and alcohol, the latter selected (07 per cent.), and ethereal oil (3 per cent.): also known as Hoffman's anodyne.— e'ther-en'gine, n. See ENGINE.

— e. extract, the ether-soluble matter.— e. value, a measure of fatty esters, being the difference between the saponification and acid values.— fruit e., one of certain organic ethers, or mixtures of them, which are characterized by aromas resembling those of natural fruit. Those most commonly used in essences, fruit-sirups, etc., are ethyl, butyl, and amyl salts of acetic, propionic, butyric, and valerianic acids: so called in the trade, respectively, as the ethyl salt of hydrobromic acid (C_2H_5Br). ethyl bromid; — hydrocyanic e., a colorless, highly poisonous, ethereal liquid (C_2H_5CN), miscible with water, alcohol, and ether. ethyl-ri-cy'a-nid; — quiescent e., the luminiferous ether regarded as unaffected by movement of bodies within or through it.— salicylic methyl e., same as BETOL.— spirit of nitrolic e., a pharmaceutical term applied to ordinary or ethyl ether. sulfuric e.; — sulfuric e., see under SULFUR.— Wigger's e., same as CHLORIDEN.

E'ther, n. Myth. Josh. xv, 42. Same as ETHAM.

e-the're-al, 1 ē-thĭr'ē-əl; 2 ē-thē're-al, a. 1. Having the nature of ether or air; hence, light; airy; fine; subtile; exquisite.

It is the ethereal character of that art, that gives the charm to repartee. M. DAVIES Fun vol. ii, p. 255. [tr. ROS. 1878.]

2. Existing in or belonging to the ether or upper air; serial; heavenly.

WORDSWORTH Peter Bell Prol., st. 31.

3. Chem. Of or pertaining to an ether. See phrases. 4. Physics. Of or pertaining to ether; having the nature of ether.

This ethereal medium, . . . is exceedingly more rare and more elastic than air. BREWSTER Newton p. 273. [tr. 1833.]
[< L. ætherius, < Gr. aithērios, < aithēr, ether.] e-the're-an; e-the're-ous; e-the'rī-al; e-the'rī-an. SYN. see AIRY; ANGELIC; CELESTIAL.— ethereal extract, an extract in the preparation of which the agent or menstruum.— e. oil (U. S. Pharm.), a transparent, nearly colorless, volatile liquid, consisting of equal volumes of heavy oil of wine and ether made by distilling equal parts of alcohol and nitric acid, to which mixture this quantity of water is added and, after distillation, ether equal in volume to the distillate.— e-the're-al-i-sy, n. 1. The state or quality of being ethereal or spiritual. 2. The act of etherealizing, or the state of being etherealized.— e-the're-al-ism; — e-the're-al'i-ty. — e-the're-al-i-za'tion, n. See e-the're-al-ize, v. I. t. 1. e'ther-ene, 1 ī'ther-ēn; 2 ē'ther-ēn. SYN. see ETHYLENE.

e-ther'ic, a. Of or pertaining to ether, ether atmospheric or chemical. e-ther'i-cal; — e-ther'i-fi-ca'tion, n. Chem. The formation of ether.— e-ther'i-fy, vt. Chem. To change into ether.

E'ther-ni'ī-dæ, 1 ī'thĕr-nĭ'ī-dē; 2 ē'ther-nī'ī-dē, n. pl. Conch. A family of fresh-water bivalves having a shell like that of the oyster. E-ther'ni-a, (t.g.) [< L. æthernia; see ETHEREAL.]

eth'er-ion, 1 ĕth'ĕr-ĭ-ŏn, n. [PROV. ENG.] A flexible rod for binding hedges.

e-the'ri-on, 1 ı-thĭr'ē-ŏn; 2 ē-thē'rī-ŏn, n. A supposed element announced by Smith in 1896. Its discoverer believes that its density is only ¹/₇₀₀ that of hydrogen, and that its conductivity for heat is 100 times as great. He thinks that it probably forms an interstellar atmosphere, whence the name. It is expected to be finally admitted. [< Gr. aitherion, neut. of aitherios; see ETHEREAL.]

e'ther-ism, 1 ī'ther-ĭzm; 2 ē'ther-ĭsm, n. Med. The phenomena resulting from the inhalation or excessive use of ether as an anesthetic.

e'ther-i-za'tion, 1 ī'ther-ı-zā'shən; 2 ē'ther-ı-zā'shon, n. 1. The act or process of etherizing, or the state of being etherized. 2. Etherization. e'ther-i-sa'tion.

e'ther-ize, 1 ī'ther-īz; 2 ē'ther-īz, vt. [-IRED; -IZ'ING.] 1. To subject to the influence of ether. 2. To etherify. e'ther-ist.— e'ther-iz'er, n. An apparatus for administering ether, or a person who administers it. e'ther-is'er.

e'ther-og'ra-phy, 1 ī'ther-ŏg'rə-fı; 2 ē'ther-ŏg'rə-fy, n. Same as AEROGRAPHY. [< ETHER + -GRAPHY.]

e'ther-ol, 1 ī'ther-ōl or -ŏl; 2 ē'ther-ōl or -ŏl, n. Chem. A yellowish oily liquid hydrocarbon that separates from ethereal oil. [< ETHER + -OL.] æ'ther-ol.

e'ther-o-late, 1 ī'ther-ō-lāt; 2 ē'ther-o-lāt, n. A solution in ether; a compound which includes ether. [< ETHER.]

e'ther-o-ma'ni-a, 1 ī'ther-o-mā'nı-ə; 2 ē'ther-o-mā'ni-a, n. Pathol. Uncontrollable longing for ether as an intoxicant. [< ETHER + Gr. mania, madness.]

e'ther-on, 1 ī'ther-on; 2 ē'ther-ŏn, n. Physics. An electrically charged particle, smaller than the electron or proton.

e'ther-ous, 1 ī'ther-əs; 2 ē'ther-us, a. Like ether in odor.

eth'ic, 1 ĕth'ĭk; 2 ĕth'ic. I. a. Same as ETHICAL. II. n. 1. The philosophy of morals; ethics: now revived by some writers for ethics, but usually preserving the philosophy rather than the science of morality.

Without belief in God and the immutable ethic of his law there could be no conviction of sin.
R. S. FOSTER Philos. Christian Experience p. 107. [tr. & pr. 1890.]

2. The standard of character set up by any race or nation. Compare ETHOS. [< LL. ethicus, < Gr. ēthikos, < ēthos, character.] eth'i-cal; eth'ic-ist; eth'i-cian.

eth'i-cal, 1 ĕth'ĭ-kəl; 2 ĕth'i-cal, a. 1. Pertaining or relating to ethics or morals; dealing with or treating of ethics or ethical questions. Compare ESTHETIC.

The poetry of the unimaginative Chinese is noticeable for ethical good sense. ALGER Poetry of the East p. 6. [n. pub. 1874.]

2. Of or pertaining to ethics, as opposed to pathos. eth'ic-ic. SYN.: see MORAL.— ethical culture, culture tending to the elevation of the ethical and moral standards of living.— e. dative, the dative of a personal pronoun interjected to indicate indirect interest or sympathetic concern.— eth'i-cal-ly, adv.— eth'i-cal-ness, n.— Society for Ethical Culture, a society founded in 1876 by Dr. Felix Adler and a few associates, in order to provide a center for those persons who had lost their attachment to traditional creeds, but were nevertheless conscious of the necessity of the search for the ideal good and to assist in promoting the moral betterment of the individual and of society. The society affirms no creeds and is not allied to any, but teaches that moral ends are above all human interests, and that the authority of the moral law is not dependent upon either religious belief or philosophical theories, but is imperative of itself.

e-thi'cian, 1 ē-thĭsh'ən; 2 ē-thish'an, n. A student of or writer on ethical subjects.

eth'i-cism, 1 ĕth'ĭ-sĭzm; 2 ĕth'ĭ-çĭzm, n. A tendency to moralize. W. D. HOWELLS Harper's Mag. Nov., 1895, p. 867.

eth'i-cize, 1 ĕth'ĭ-sīz; 2 ĕth'ĭ-çīz, v. [-CIZED; -CIZ'ING.] I. t. To invest with ethical qualities; treat ethically.

Naturalising ethics reverses the idealising process which rather ethicizes Nature. MARTINEAU Types of Ethical Theory vol. II. p. 424. [MACM. 1891.]

II. i. To discuss ethics; moralize. eth'i-cizer.

eth'i-co-, 1 ĕth'ĭ-kō-; 2 ĕth'i-co-. Combining form referring to ethics as associated with some allied principle or system; as, ethicoæsthetic, ethicopolitical, ethicoreligious, etc.: a combining form.

eth'ics, 1 ĕth'ĭks; 2 ĕth'ics, n. 1. The science or doctrine of the sources, principles, sanctions, and ideals of human conduct and character; the science of the morally right; moral science; also, a treatise on the science; as, the ethics of Aristotle. See DUTY; MORAL; RIGHT; VIRTUE.

As psychological ethics, it investigates the sources of morality right and wrong conduct as they are found in the nature of man's sentiments, appetites, and faculties of cognition, his capacity for judgment, his freedom, and his power to frame and pursue ideals. As practical e., it discusses the doctrine of virtues, or the moral forms and habits, of right conduct in the varying relations of actual life. As evolutionary e., it investigates the rules of morality right living, the ideals of conscience, and the principles governing the right and wrong in motive and character, as these are all subject to the same influences which condition the development of other forms of human culture. Theoretical e. assumes the different forms held by the schools of ethics as dependent upon their philosophical methods, points of view, and entire system of tenets developed by reflective thinking. Among the best-known of these varied schools are those which assume the greatest good to be (1) the will of God, as theological voluntarism; (2) the happiness of the individual, as egoistic type, as Epicurean, hedonism, and private eudemonism; (3) the happiness of the community at large, the altruistic type, as public eudemonism, universalistic hedonism, and utilitarianism; (4) the fulfilment of the dictates of pure reason, Kant's categorical imperative, as rationalism; (5) the perfection, variously defined, of the individual or of the race, as perfectionism; (6) the complete adjustment of individual adaptation to environment, as biologism; (7) progress toward the ideal of personality as existing under a given set of social relations, as social ethics; (8) the result of experience for each individual, as empiricism; and those based upon the relation of man to law considered either as impersonal or as the working out of the divine will, as Stoicism and Christian ethics.

2. The principles of morally right and wrong conduct and character, as expounded by a certain person or school, or as applied to the conduct of circumstances, or mode of life, or calling; as, the ethics of Hippocrates, medical ethics, the ethics of the legal profession, etc.

3. The moral sciences generally, including, besides moral science proper, the various branches of political and social science, of law (civil, political, and international), of jurisprudence, etc. [Pl. of ETHIC.] — eth'i-cist, n. One who writes upon or is versed in ethics. e-thi'cian; — eth'i-cism, n.

eth'id, } 1 ĕth'ĭd; 2 ĕth'id (XIII), n. Chem. A compound eth'ide, } of an element or radical and ethyl; as, zinc ethid, $Zn(C_2H_5)_2$. [ETH(YL) + -ID.] [LINN. eth'in‡.

eth'line, 1 ĕth'ĭn; 2 ĕth'in (XIII), n. Chem. Same as ETHYLENE.

eth'l-on'ic, 1 ĕth'ĭ-ŏn'ĭk; 2 ĕth'ĭ-ŏn'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or containing ethyl and sulfur. [< e (in ETHYLENE) + on (< thion, sulfur.] — ethionic acid, a liquid compound ($C_2H_6S_2O$) formed by the addition of water to ethionic anhydrid.— e. anhydrid, a crystalline compound ($C_2H_4S_2O_5$) formed by the action of sulfuric anhydrid on alcohol; carbyl sulfate.

E'thi-op, 1 ī'thı-ŏp; 2 ē'thi-ŏp. [Archaic.] I. a. Ethiopian; also, negro: black. II. n. An Ethiopian. Æ'thi-op‡.

E'thi-o-pi-a, 1 ī'thı-ō'pı-ə; 2 ē'thi-ō'pi-a, n. The ancient name of a region south of Egypt, including modern Nubia, Abyssinia, Kordofan, and Senaar; area about 150,000 sq. m. The name Ethiopia is generally identified with the Biblical Cush, but all early accounts of this region are vague and untrustworthy. The ancients at one time called all the dark-brown or black races Ethiopians, but subsequently the term became confined to the inhabitants of the Nile valley above the first cataract. In modern usage Ethiopia is equivalent to the Abyssinian Empire, or, more loosely, Abyssinia with the adjacent southern territories, particularly that inhabited by the Galloa.

E'thi-o-pi-an, 1 ī'thı-ō'pı-ən; 2 ē'thi-ō'pi-an, a. & n. I. a. Of, pertaining to, or derived from Ethiopia. This term is applied in common use to the West-African peoples of Nubia and Abyssinia. It is often used as descriptive of one of the divisions of the human race, comprising the Negro, Bantu, and Negrito peoples of Africa, including Galloa and Bejas modified by Arab blood, as among the Somalis, Abyssinians, etc., and by negro blood among the Zandeh and Fulbé, as well as the dark-skinned races of Oceania. The generalized negro is known as Homo ethiopicus. The typical Ethiopian is of a very dark, almost black, complexion, is prognathous and dolichocephalous, and has crisped black hair, prominent teeth, a broad flat nose, thick and protruding lips, and a scanty beard, but there are several marked divergencies from this type, as the Negro and Negrito.

A number of . . . African dialects . . . fall into three groups: the Ethiopian or Abyssinian, of which the Galla is at present the most important member; the Libyan or Berber . . . and the Nubian tent. W. D. WHITNEY Study of Lang. p. 341. [s. 1874.]

2. In general, African; negro. [< L. Æthiopia, < Gr. Aithiopia, Ethiopia.] E'thi-o-pi-an‡; E'thi-o-pi'ic.— Ethiopian eggplant (Bot.), a species of Solanum (S. incertifolium) occasionally cultivated for its ornamental fruit of a scarlet or yellow color.— E. lily (Bot.), the calla-lily.— E. pepper (Bot.), same as AFRICAN CUBEBS.— E. region (Zoögeog.), one of the primary faunal divisions of the world, including southern Arabia, Africa as far north as the Sahara, and Madagascar with its near-by islands. Some authorities make Madagascar an independent region. See under MALAGASY.

E'thi-o-pi-an, n. 1. An African black man; a negro. 2. A native of Ethiopia; specif.: (1) An ancient Ethiopian, of mixed Hamitic and Negro blood. (2) An Abyssinian Semitic, Hamitic, Hamitic, and Negro blood. (3) A member of one of the tribes of northeastern Africa, as a Somali, Galla, etc. (4) A member of any of the Semitic, Hamitic, or mixed Negro tribes inhabiting Ethiopia, q. v. A group of the Semitic stock of languages, embracing the Somali, Galla, Bejas, and Danakil dialects. E'thi-o-pi-an‡. — E'thi-o-pi-an-ism, n. Interest in and support of negro controversies, particularly in Africa. — E'thi-o-pesset, n. A negro woman.

E'thi-op'ic, 1 ī'thı-ŏp'ĭk; 2 ē'thi-ŏp'ic, n. The language of ancient Ethiopia; the language used in the services and records of the Abyssinian Church; Geez; also, one of certain cognate dialects. It is nearly akin to the Himyaritic of Arabia, and is one of the two dialects of the Abyssinian group of Semitic languages. See ABYSSINIAN. It has a considerable literature, beginning in the 4th century. The Geez or Ethiopic proper, the language of the ancient kingdom of Aksum, was reduced to writing at an early date.— Ethiopic alphabet, an alphabet of the southern Semitic stock, but of uncertain origin, forming the ancient liturgical script of the Abyssinian Church.— E. Church, that which was once the church of Abyssinia, Nubia, and Alodia, but is now limited to Abyssinia. It was founded about A. D. 330 by Frumentius, and is monophysitic in regard to the person of Christ. Its doctrines and ritual, save for certain peculiar rites, are mainly Coptic, and its sacred books are in Ethiopic, a dead language. Its head, called Abuna ("Our Father"), who lives at Gondar, is always appointed by the Coptic patriarch at Cairo, and is invariably a Copt.— E. liturgies, liturgies associated with the Ethiopic Church, such as the Liturgy of all the Apostles. See LITURGY.

eth'ic, 1 ĕth'ĭk; 2 ĕth'ic, n. [Rare.] Te cedar, juniper, or Eth'ə-ka'zin, 1 ĕth'ə-kē'zĭn; 2 ĕth'ə-kā'zin, n. Bib. (R. V.). Josh. xix, 13. [ix, 36.

Eth'ma, 1 ĕth'mə; 2 ĕth'ma, n. Bib. (Apocryphal). 1 Esd.

eth'mo-, 1 ĕth'mo-; 2 ĕth'mo-. From Greek ethmos, sieve (< ithō, sift): a combining form used chiefly in adjectives with the general sense of or pertaining to the ethmoid and some other bone indicated; as, ethmo-frontal, ethmofrontal, ethmolacrimal, ethmomaxillary, ethmonasal, ethmopalatal, ethmoprespheno-idal, ethmosphenoid, ethmovomerine.

eth'moid, 1 ĕth'moid; 2 ĕth'mŏid, a. Anat. Of or pertaining to the ethmoid; literally, like a sieve. [< Gr. ēthmoeidēs, < ēthmos (see ETHMO-) + eidos; see -OID.]

eth'moid, n. A bone, cubical in man and composed of thin plates, situated at the base of the skull, behind the root of the nose. The filaments of the olfactory nerve pass through it and are distributed to the mucous membrane that covers it.— lateral ethmoid, in teleost fishes, an ectethmoid.

eth-moi'dal, 1 ĕth-moi'dəl; 2 ĕth-mŏi'dal, a. Situated near the ethmoid bone; ethmoid; as, an ethmoidal ossification.— ethmoidal cells, cavities in the ethmoid and adjoining bones enclosed by delicate lamellæ. See under NASAL FOSSA.— e. crest, same as CRISTA GALLI.— e. fossa, a furrow in the cribriform plate accommodating the olfactory bulb of the brain.— e. plate, the cribriform plate.— e. process, the plane of the cribriform plate. ethmoid-i'tis, 1 ĕth-moid-ī'tĭs or -ī'tĭs; 2 ĕth'mŏid-ī'tis or -ī'tis, n. Pathol. An inflammation of the lining membrane of the ethmoidal cells.

eth'mo-lys'i-an, 1 ĕth'mo-lĭs'ı-ən; 2 ĕth'mo-lĭs'i-an, a. Zool. Having the maxillopremaxillæ directed backward between the posterolateral genital plates. [< ETHMO- + Gr. lysis, opening.]

eth'mo-prak'tal, 1 ĕth'mo-prăk'təl; 2 ĕth'mo-frăk'tal, a. Zool. Having the maxillopremaxillæ restricted within the anteromedial plates. [< ETHMO- + Gr. phraktos, < phrassō, enclose.]

eth'mo-phy'sal, 1 ĕth'mo-fī'səl; 2 ĕth'mo-fī'sal, n. Ich. The nasal bone in fishes. [< ETHMO- + Gr. physa, bladder.]

eth'mose, 1 ĕth'mōs; 2 ĕth'mōs. I. a. Perforated with small openings; sieve-like. II. n. Cellular or areolar tissue. [< Gr. ēthmos; see ETHMO-.]

eth'mo-tur'bi-nal, 1 ĕth'mo-tŭr'bı-nəl; 2 ĕth'mo-tŭr'bi-nal. I. a. Of or pertaining to the ethmoid and turbinal bones. eth'mo-tur'bi-nate‡. II. n. Anat. One of the lateral masses of the ethmoid on which are situated the superior and middle turbinal bones.

eth'my-phi'dis, 1 ĕth'mı-fī'dĭs or -ī'dĭs; 2 ĕth'my-fī'dis or -ī'dis, n. Same as CELLULITIS.

eth'na-gog, } 1 ĕth'nə-gŏg; 2 ĕth'na-gŏg, n. A leader eth'na-gogue, } of a race or nation. [< Gr. ethnos, nation, + agō, lead.]

Eth'nan, 1 ĕth'nən; 2 ĕth'nan, n. Bib. 1 Chron. iv, 7.

eth'narch, 1 ĕth'närk; 2 ĕth'närc, n. Rom. A governor of a nation or people; viceroy. [< Gr. ethnarchēs, < ethnos, nation, + archō, rule.]

— eth'nar-chy, n. The office or jurisdiction of an ethnarch, or the province or territory ruled by him.

Eth'nī, 1 ĕth'nī; 2 ĕth'nī, n. Bib. 1 Chron. vi, 41.

eth'nic, 1 ĕth'nĭk; 2 ĕth'nic, a. 1. Of or pertaining to races or peoples; characteristic of a race, nation, or people; descriptive of or based on national peculiarities' racial; ethnological.

Of all the ethnic religions, that of Hindustan is admitted to be the oldest. MACKEY Encyc. Freemasonry p. 341. [MDS. 1879.]

2. Of, pertaining to, or peculiar to the nations that are neither Jewish nor Christian: gentile; heathen; pagan. [< F. ethnique, < L. ethnicus, < Gr. ethnikos, < ethnos, nation.] eth'ni-cal†— eth'nic, n. A gentile; pagan; heathen.— eth'ni-cal-ly, adv.— eth'ni-cism, n. Religion of human origin, as distinguished from Judaism and Christianity; paganism; heathendom; idolatry.— eth'ni-cist, n. An ethnologist.— eth'ni-cize, vi. To ethnize.— eth'ni-sht, a. Heathenish.— eth'ni-tze, vi. To tend toward or favor heathenism.

eth'no-, 1 eth'no-; 2 ĕth'no-. Ethnic: a combining form.

eth"no-bot'a-ny, 1 eth'no-bot'a-ni; 2 ĕth'no-bŏt'a-ny, n. The branch of ethnology dealing with the relationship of man to his vegetal environment. It is studied through botany, as in tracing the migration of a people by following a plant which they use in their technology. [< Gr. ethnos, race, + BOTANY.] — eth"no-bo-tan'ic, eth"no-bo-tan'i-cal‡, a.

eth"no-cen'tric, 1 eth'no-sen'trik; 2 ĕth'no-çĕn'trik, a. Starting from the race (or tribe) as a center.

eth"no-con-chol'o-gy, 1 eth'no-kong-kŏl'o-jy; 2 ĕth'no-cŏn-cŏl'o-gy, n. That branch of ethnology which treats of the ornamental and other uses of shells among different peoples.

eth-nod'i-ey, 1 eth-nod'i-se; 2 ĕth-nŏd'i-çy, n. The branch of ethnology that deals with comparative jurisprudence. [< Gr. ethnos, race, + dikē, justice.]

eth"no-flo'ra, 1 eth'no-flō'ra; 2 ĕth'no-flō'ra, n. 1. The flora of a country in its relation to the race; specif., the influence of a country's flora on the manners and physical development of the inhabitants. 2. Any work treating systematically the flora of a given region.

ethnog, obbr. Ethnography; ethnographer.

eth-nog'a-my, 1 eth-nog'a-mi; 2 ĕth-nŏg'a-my, n. The custom of certain primitive ethnic groups of marrying only within the circle of their own tribe or race in the exclusion of interribal or interracial marriage. [< ETHNO- + Gr. gamos, marriage.]— eth"no-gam'ic, a.

eth"no-gen'ic, 1 eth'no-jen'ik; 2 ĕth'no-ĝĕn'ic, a. 1. Of or pertaining to ethnogeny. 2. Of or pertaining to races or peoples.— ethnogenic association, social grouping by blood-relationship, as in clans; tribal association, indicating a stage of social development.— eth-nog'e-ny, ethnogeny, especially as relating to tribal organization and conduct. See SOCIOLOGY.

eth-nog'e-ny, 1 eth-noj'i-ni; 2 ĕth-nŏg'e-ny, n. The department of ethnology that deals with the genesis of nations or origin of races based on blood-relationship. [< Gr. ethnos, race, + -GENY.]

eth"no-graph'ic, 1 eth'no-graf'ik; 2 ĕth'no-grăf'ic, a. Of or pertaining to ethnography; descriptive of races and peoples. eth"no-graph'i-cal-ly, adv.— ethnographic parallels, the appearance of closely similar usages, religious beliefs, or technical methods, among different races or classes.— eth"no-graph'i-cal-ness, n.

eth-nog'ra-pher, 1 eth-nog'ra-fer; 2 ĕth-nŏg'ra-fer, n. One who studies or is proficient in ethnography. eth-nog'raphist‡.

eth-nog'ra-phy, 1 eth-nog'ra-fi; 2 ĕth-nŏg'ra-fy, n. 1. Anthrop. The branch that considers man geographically and descriptively, treating of the origin and subdivision of races, and embracing theories of monogenism and polygenism, the study of the continental areas at the time of man's appearance on earth, and the causes and consequences of migration. Compare ETHNOGENY.

Ethnography . . . studies the subdivision and migration of races, local traits, peculiarities and customs, and confines itself to matters of present observation.

D. G. BRINTON Anthropology p. 7. [PUB. BY AUTHOR 1892.]

2. Formerly, ethnology. [< Gr. ethnos, race, + -GRAPHY.]

ethnol, abbr. Ethnological; ethnology.

eth"no-log'i-cal, 1 eth'no-loj'i-kal; 2 ĕth'no-lŏg'i-cal, a. Of or pertaining to ethnology. eth"no-log'ic‡.— eth"no-log'i-cal-ly, adv. According to ethnological principles.

eth-nol'o-gize, 1 eth-nol'o-jiz; 2 ĕth-nŏl'o-ĝĭz, vt. [-GIZED, -GIZING.] To consider a subject from the ethnological standpoint.

eth-nol'o-gy, 1 eth-nol'o-ji; 2 ĕth-nŏl'o-gy, n. 1. The science of the natural races and families of men. See plate of MANKIND.

History catches man as he emerges from the patriarchal state: ethnology shows how he lived, grew, and improved in that state.

W. BAGEHOT Physics and Politics p. 15. [A. 1873.]

2. Specifically, the branch of anthropology proper that considers man historically, comparatively, and analytically.

It embraces (1) ethnography, the study of races and race characteristics, including ethnic psychology; (2) sociology; (3) ethnotechnics; (4) the study of comparative religion; (5) linguistics; and (6) folk-lore.

Ethnology . . . contemplates man as a social creature. It is more concerned with the mental, the psychical part of man, than with his physical nature, and seeks to trace the intellectual development of communities by studying the growth of government, laws, arts, languages, religions, and society.

D. G. BRINTON Anthropology p. 5. [PUB. BY AUTHOR 1892.]

eth"no-ma'ni-ac, 1 eth'no-mē'ni-ak; 2 ĕth'no-mā'ni-ăc, n. A rabid advocate of racial autonomy; an extreme nationalist. [< Gr. ethnos, race, + MANIAC.]

eth-nom'e-try, 1 eth-nom'i-tri; 2 ĕth-nŏm'e-try, n. The measuring, or the application of some standard as the measure, of the respective civilization of different peoples or races. [< ETHNO- + -METRY.]— eth"no-met'ric, a.

eth"no-psy'chic, 1 eth'no-sai'kik; 2 ĕth'no-sī'çic, a. Relating to ethnopsychology.

eth"no-psy-chol'o-gy, 1 eth'no-sai-kol'o-ji; 2 ĕth'no-sī-cŏl'o-gy, n. The psychology of different races and peoples; racial psychology as a comparative study. [< Gr. ethnos, race, + PSYCHOLOGY.] — eth"no-psy"chological, a.

eth'nos, 1 eth'nos; 2 ĕth'nŏs, n. [Gr.] Anthropol. 1. A consanguineal group. 2. A gentile folk under kingly rule, depending more on political institutions than on bonds of kinship: opposed to demos. 3. Society; organization, as a whole or as any particular group.

eth"no-tech'nics, 1 eth'no-tek'niks; 2 ĕth'no-tĕc'nics, n. The study of the arts in their relation to tribes and races. [< Gr. ethnos, race, + technē, art.] eth"no-tech-nog'ra-phy‡.

eth"no-zo-ol'o-gy, 1 eth'no-zo-ol'o-ji; 2 ĕth'no-zo-ŏl'o-ġy, n. The branch of ethnology dealing with the fauna of a region in its relation to the people or peoples inhabiting the region: the correlative of ethnobotany. [< ETHNO- + ZOOLOGY.]

E-thoch'ro-i, n. Same as ĒTHOCHROI.

e-thog'ra-phy, 1 e-thog'ra-fi; 2 e-thŏg'ra-fy, n. Anthrop. A description of the moral attributes and customs of mankind. [< ETHOS + -GRAPHY.]

e-thol'o-gy, 1 e-thol'o-ji; 2 e-thŏl'o-ġy, n. 1. The applied science of ethics.

The science of Ethology may be called the Exact Science of Character. MILL Logic p. 543. in. 1856.]

2. Biol. Ecology. 3. The study of human customs. 4†. Mimicry. [< L. ethologia, < Gr. ēthologia, < ēthos, character; see SOL-OLOGY.] — eth"o-log'i-cal, eth"o-log'ic, a.— e-thol'o-gist, n.

eth"o-pe'ia, 1 eth'o-pi'a; 2 ĕth'o-pē'a, n. Same as ĒTHOPOEIA.

eth"o-pe'ian, 1 eth'o-pi'an; 2 ĕth'o-pē'an, a. Having both ethological and physical qualities.

e'thos, 1 i'thos; 2 ē'thŏs, n. 1. The characteristic spirit, disposition, or tendency of a people or community regarded as an endowment and as expressed in their customs, tastes, etc.; the genius of an institution or a system. 2. Gr. Art & Rhet. The essential characteristics, or ideal attributes, of a work, or period in art or literature, or the type to which the art or period corresponds, as opposed to what is merely emotional, incidental, and transient; as, the dignity and ethos of certain Greek sculptures. Compare PATHOS. [< Gr. ēthos, character.]

eth-ox'id, 1 eth-oks'id; 2 ĕth-ŏks'id, n. Chem. An ethoxyl compound; ethylate. eth-ox'ide‡.

eth-ox'yl, 1 eth-oks'il; 2 ĕth-ŏks'yl, n. Chem. Of or pertaining to ethoxyl: a combining form.— eth-ox'y-caf'e-in, n. Chem. A narcotic and diuretic drug ($C_8H_9N_4O_2OC_2H_5$) derived from bromocaffein. eth-ox'y-caf'e-ine‡.

eth-ox'yl, 1 eth-oks'il; 2 ĕth-ŏks'yl, n. Chem. The univalent radical C_2H_5O.

eth'yl, 1 eth'il; 2 ĕth'yl, n. A monatomic unisolated organic radical (C_2H_5) of the paraffin series. Adjectively the word denotes the existence of the radical in a compound; as, ethyl alcohol ($C_2H_5.HO$), ethyl ether ($C_2H_5.O.C_2H_5$), ethyl acetate ($C_2H_5.C_2H_3O_2$). — ethyl ether. See under ACETIC. — e. acetoacetate (Organic Chem.), a colorless liquid ($CH_3CO.CH_2COOC_2H_5$) used in manufacturing antipyrin and of importance in synthesising.— e. aldehyde (Chem.), see ALDEHYDE, 1.— e. benzoate (Chem.), a colorless liquid ($C_6H_5COO.C_2H_5$) with a pear-like smell, used as an artificial fruit-essence.— e. bromide (Chem.), C_2H_5Br, an extremely volatile, colorless liquid (C_2H_5Br): used as an anesthetic.— e. butyrate (Chem.), a colorless liquid ($C_3H_7COOC_2H_5$) produced synthetically or extracted from several kinds of fruit, having a pineapple-like odor. It is the chief flavoring agent of rum, and as rum essence or rum ether, is also employed in making artificial rum.— e. carbamin, ethylamin.— e. chlorid (Chem.), a colorless ethereal liquid (C_2H_5Cl) used in medicine and surgery as a local anesthetic.— e. disulfid (Chem.), a colorless, poisonous, inflammable liquid, with garlicky smell.— e. ether, e. oxid, same as ETHER.— e. formate (Chem.), a colorless liquid ($HCOO.C_2H_5$) used as a hypnotic and as a flavoring agent.— e. hydrate (Chem.), same as ALCOHOL.— e. hydrid, same as ETHANE.— e. nitrate (Chem.), a colorless, inflammable liquid ($C_2H_5NO_3$).— e. nitrite (Chem.), a yellowish inflammable liquid ($C_2H_5NO_2$), with apple-like smell, used in medicine as spirits of nitrous ether.— e. iodid (Chem.), a colorless liquid (C_2H_5I), with garlic-like odor, used in medicine as an antispasmodic and anesthetic, and extensively in organic synthesis, as in the manufacture of certain anilin dyes.— e. oxalate (Chem.), a colorless oily liquid ($C_6H_{10}O_4$), having an aromatic odor; oxalic ether.— e. phenacetin (Chem.), a yellow oily compound ($C_2H_5OC_6H_4N(C_2H_3)COCH_3$) obtained by treating the sodium compound of paracetphenetidin with ethyl iodid. It is recognized as a hypnotic and analgesic.— e. red, a dye used as a color-sensitizer in photography.— eth'yl-at"ed, a. Treated or combined with ethyl or its compounds.

— e-thyl'ic, a.— ethylic alcohol, common or ethyl alcohol. See ALCOHOL.

eth'yl-am'in, 1 eth'il-am'in, -an or -in; 2 ĕth'yl-ăm'in. eth'yl-am'ine, } in, -in or -in, n. Chem. A colorless volatile inflammable liquid ($C_2H_5NH_2$), having the odor of ammonia, formed variously, as by the action of ammonia on the ethers of inorganic acids. Compare DIETHYLAMIN; TRIETHYLAMIN. [< ETHYL + AMIN.]

eth'yl-ate, 1 eth'il-et; 2 ĕth'yl-āt, n. Chem. Same as ALCOHOLATE.— eth'y-late, v.

eth'yl-ene, 1 eth'il-in; 2 ĕth'yl-ēn, n. Chem. A colorless inflammable gaseous compound (C_2H_4) having a suffocating odor; obtained in coal-gas; bicarburetted hydrogen. [< ETHYL.] — ethylene blue, see BLUE.— e. bromid (Chem.), a colorless, heavy volatile liquid compound of ethylene and bromin ($C_2H_4Br_2$), agreeable to taste and smell, used as an antiseptic and anesthetic. — e. dibromid‡.— e. hydriodid, iodid of ethyl.— e. plathinochlorid (Chem.), a yellow compound ($C_2H_4PtCl_2$) formed by boiling platinic chlorid in alcohol. It deposits metallic platinum on a surface on which it is heated. — e. series (Chem.), a series of hydrocarbon compounds, of which ethylene is the type, having the general formula C_nH_{2n}.

eth'yl-en'i-min, 1 eth'il-en'i-min; 2 ĕth'yl-ĕn'i-min, n. Chem. A fatty base (C_2H_4NH) found in semen: supposed to be identical with spermin. [< ETHYLENE + IMIDE.]

e-thyl'i-dene, 1 i-thil'i-din; 2 ē-thĭl'i-dēn, n. Chem. A theoretical divalent unsaturated radical ($CH_3.CH$), metameric with ethylene. Formerly called ethid.— ethylidene bluret (Chem.), same as TRIGENIC ACID.— e. chlorid (Chem.), same as CHLORIDEN.— e. diamin (Chem.), a nonexistent ptomain ($C_2H_4(NH_2)_2$).

eth'yl-in, 1 eth'il-in; 2 ĕth'yl-ĭn, n. Chem. Any one of several complex ethers of glycerin and ethyl, as triethylin ($C_3H_5(O.C_2H_5)_3$).

eth"yl-sul'fu-ric, } 1 eth"il-sul-fiū'rik; 2 ĕth"yl-sŭl-eth"yl-sul-phu'ric, } fū'ric, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from ethyl and sulfuric acid.— ethylsulfuric acid, a brown viscid liquid compound ($HC_2H_5SO_4$) formed by the action of concentrated sulfuric acid on alcohol, resulting as an intermediate product of etherification.

E'thu-sa, 1 ē'thiū-sa; 2 ē'thŭ-sa, n. [Gr. ēthos, character.] e'ti-o-late, 1 i'ti-o-let; 2 ē'ti-ō-lēt, v. [-LAT'ED; -LAT'ING.] i. t. 1. To blanch or whiten (a plant) by excluding the sunlight. 2. To impart a pale or sickly hue to the skin (of a human being) by disease or absence of light. II. t. 1. To become white or pale, as a plant through absence of light. 2. Med. To acquire a sickly hue from disease or confinement in a dark place. [< F. étioler, blanch, < esteule, straw, < L. stipula; see STUBBLE.] e'ti-o-lize†.— e'ti-o-lat"ed, a. Blanched; colorless; pale. e'ti-o-late†.— e'ti-o-la'tion, n.

e'ti-o-lin, 1 i'ti-o-lin; 2 ē'ti-ō-lĭn, n. A yellow form of chlorophyl formed by plants growing in the dark. [< ETIOLATE.]

e'ti-ol'o-gy, 1 i'ti-ol'o-ji; 2 ē'ti-ŏl'o-ġy, n. 1. The science of efficient, as distinguished from final, causes. 2. Specifically: (1) In science, an inquiry after the physical causes of phenomena, as in biology or physics.

eu"cho-lo'gi-on, 1 yū"ko-lō'jɪ-on; 2 yu"co-lō'ġi-ŏn, n. [-GI-A, pl.] 1. [E-] Gr. Ch. The book containing the ritual. 2. Any liturgy or prayer-book [< Gr. euchologion, < euchē (< euchomai, pray), prayer, + legō, say.] eu'cho-logue†; eu-chol'o-gy‡.— eu"cho-log'-i-cal, a.

eu'chre, 1 yū'kər; 2 yu'cer, vt. [EU'CHRED; EU'CHRING.] In the game of euchre, to prevent (an opponent) from taking a specified number of tricks after he has taken advantage of one of the privileges of the game; hence, to outwit or defeat; as, to euchre a man in business.

Overloaded, undermanned, meant to founder, we Euchred God Almighty's storm, bluffed the Eternal Sea!
RUDYARD KIPLING Ballad of the "Bolivar" st. 11.

eu'chre, n. 1. A game of cards, in which the opportunity to take advantage of certain privileges, connected with naming the trump, is offered each player in order, the side that accepts running the risk of being euchred.

The game is played by from two to six persons (usually by four), with a pack from which the spot-cards from the two to the seven or the nine are excluded. The knave of trumps (called the right bower) and the other knave of the same color (called the left bower) are the highest cards, except when an extra card called the joker is employed, which card takes any of the others.

We had a small game. And Ah Sin took a hand.
It was euchre.
BRET HARTE Plain Language from Truthful James st. 4.

2. The act of euchring or of being euchred; failure to score after taking advantage of any of the privileges of the game. [Cp. G. jucks, joke.] — California euchre, a variety of euchre in which the cards remaining after dealing are treated as a widow, and are claimed by the player naming the trump, who discards all but five cards. He must take as many tricks as the number bid or forfeit an equal number of points.— call-ace e., a variety of euchre for four, five, or six players, the one who orders up or makes the trump calling upon the holder of an ace in a plain suit as his partner, the play alone revealing him whom he has chosen.— cut-throat e., three-handed euchre, in which one person plays against two.— domino e., a game played with dominoes and bearing some resemblance to euchre.— drive e., progressive euchre in which the losers change tables, as if driven away.— eu'chre-pack" or e.-deck, n. The portion of a pack of cards used in euchre, generally 32 cards: employed also in many other card-games.— French e., a variety of bid euchre in which there are only 24 cards used and but four players.— progressive e., four-handed euchre played by three or more sets of players, the winners or losers changing from one table to another in some way agreed upon beforehand.— railroad e., four-handed euchre, played with a joker, in which a player is allowed to take his partner's best card and play alone (called a lone hand). There may also be peculiarities in scoring. The name is applied loosely.— set-back e., a way of playing euchre in which two points are deducted from the score of the losing partners instead of being added to the winners' score.— six- or seven-handed or bid e., a variety of euchre played by six or seven persons, in which the one who engages to take the largest number of tricks has the privilege of naming the trump.— eu'chre-ist, n. One who plays euchre.

eu-chro'ic, 1 yu-krō'ɪk; 2 yu-crō'ic, a. Chem. Of or pertaining to a compound that is characterized by a fine color. [< Gr. euchroos, well-colored, < eu, well, + chroa, color.] eu-chron'ic‡.— euchroic acid, a colorless crystalline compound ($C_{12}H_4N_2O_8$), formed by the action of an alkali on paramid.

eu'chrome, 1 yū'krōm; 2 yu'crōm, n. A brown pigment.

eu'chrone, 1 yū'krōn; 2 yu'crōn, n. Chem. A deep-blue compound formed by reducing euchroic acid.

eu-chy'li-a, 1 yu-kai'lɪ-ə; 2 yu-cy̆'li-a, n. Med. A healthy condition of the chyle. [< EU- + Gr. chylos; see CHYLE.]

eu'chy-my, 1 yū'kɪ-mɪ; 2 yu'cy-my, n. Med. A healthy condition of the bodily fluids. [< Gr. euchymia, goodness of flavor, < eu, well, + chymos; see CHYME.] eu-chym'i-a‡.

Eu-cir"ri-pe'di-a, 1 yū-sɪr"ɪ-pī'dɪ-ə; 2 yu-çĭr"i-pē'di-a, n. pl. Zool. A suborder of Cirripedia, containing the best-developed forms: it excludes the Rhizocephala.

Eu'cken, 1 ei'ken; 2 ŏi'kĕn, Christian Rudolf ($^{1}/_{5}$1846–$^{9}/_{14}$1926). A German philosopher and idealist; awarded Nobel prize for literature, 1908.

eu'clase, 1 yū'klēs; 2 yu'clās, n. Mineral. A very brittle pale-green glucinum-aluminum silicate ($HAlGlSiO_5$), crystallizing in the monoclinic system, used rarely as a gem. [< EU- + Gr. klasis, breaking, < klaō, break.]

Eu-cle'a¹, 1 yu-klī'ə; 2 yu-clē'a, n. Bot. A genus of shrubs or trees of the ebony family (Ebenaceæ), embracing about 20 species, mostly South-African, with leaves alternate, lanceolate, and crisped. The hard black wood of E. pseudo-ebenus is known as Orange river ebony. Its berries, and those of other species, are eaten by the natives. [< Gr. eukleia, glory.]

Eu-cle'i-dæ, 1 yu-klī'ɪ-dī; 2 yu-clē'i-dē, n. pl. Entom. A family of frenate moths with sluglike caterpillars, some species being naked, but others armed with branching spines. The adults are small and often ornately colored. Eu-cle'a², n. (t. g.) [< Gr. eukleia, glory.] — eu'cle-oid, a.

Eu'clid, 1 yū'klid; 2 yu'clid, n. 1. E. of Alexandria, a mathematician, born and resident in Alexandria, Egypt, about 350-300 B. C.; "father of geometry." Hence, sometimes, impersonally, the science of geometry or its principles. 2. E. of Megara, a Greek Eleatic philosopher, who founded the Dialectic school in the 5th century B. C. 3. An Athenian archon eponymos (403 B. C.) under whom the new or Ionian alphabet was introduced.

Eu-clid'e-an, 1 yū-klid'ɪ-ən or yū"klɪ-dī'ən; 2 yu-clĭd'e-an or yu"cli-dē'an, a. Of or pertaining to Euclid; especially, accordant with the axioms and postulates of Euclid's geometry. [< L. Euclides, < Gr. Eukleidēs, Euclid, < eu, well, + kleos, glory.] Eu-clid'i-an‡; Eu"klei-de'an‡.— Euclidean construction, a geometrical figure drawn with ruler and compasses.— E. space, space as to which the axioms and definitions of Euclidean geometry are accepted. See SPACE.

eu'co-lite, 1 yū'ko-lait; 2 yu'co-līt, n. Mineral. An optically positive variety of eudialyte found chiefly in Norway. [< Gr. eukolos, easily soluble.]

eu"co-lite-ti'tan-ite, 1 yū"ko-lait-tai'tən-ait, 2 yu"co-līt-tī'tan-īt, n. Mineral. A variety of titanite resembling eucolite in its properties and containing oxids of the cerium and yttrium earths. [< EUCOLITE + TITANITE.]

eu'cone, 1 yū'kōn; 2 yu'cōn, a. Having crystal cones, as the compound eyes of most insects. [< EU- + CONE.]

Eu"co-pep'o-da, 1 yū"ko-pep'o-də; 2 yu"co-pĕp'o-da, n. pl. Crust. The Copepoda in a restricted sense. [< EU- + COPEPODA.]—eu-cop'e-pod, a. & n.—eu"co-pep'o-dous, a.

Eu"co-pi'i-dæ, 1 yū"ko-pai'ɪ-dī; 2 yu"co-pī'i-dē, n. pl. Crust. A family of schizopods having the second and third feet not chelate. Eu-co'pi-a, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. eukōpos, < eu, well, + kōpē, oar.] Eu-cop'i-dæ‡.— eu-co'pi-id, n. — eu-co'pi-oid, a.

eu'cra-site, 1 yū'kra-sait; 2 yu'cra-sīt, n. Mineral. A silicate of thorium and other rare earth allied to thorite. [< Gr. eukrasia; see EUCRASY.]

eu'era-sy, 1 yū'kra-si; 2 yū'era-sy, n. Med. A sound bodily constitution; good temperament; perfect health. [< Gr. eukrasia, < eu, well, + keramnymi, mix.] eu'chras-sy; ‡ eu-cra'si-aĭ.— eu-cras'ite, a.

eu'crite, 1 yū'krait; 2 yu'crit, n. Petrol. A variety of gabbro in which the feldspar is anorthite. [< Gr. eukritos, manifest, < eu, well, + krinō, discern.] eu'cryt'ec.

Eu"crus-ta'ce-a, 1 yū"krus-tē'shi-ə; 2 yu"crūs-tā'she-a, n. pl. Zool. A subclass of Crustacea containing the most recent and fully developed orders, with movable stalk-eyes, appendages differentiated, two pairs of antennæ, and the body undivided longitudinally. [< Eu- + Crustacea.]

Eu-cryph'ĭ-a, 1 yū-crĭf'i-ə; 2 yu-crĭf'i-a, n. Bot. A genus of trees or shrubs forming the family Eucryphiaceæ. Its species, 2 of Tasmania and 2 of Chile, have evergreen, simple or pinnate leaves, polypetalous flowers, and woody or leathery capsules. E. Billardieri is one of the handsomest trees of Tasmania. [< Gr. eu, well, + kryphaios, secret.]

Eu-cryph"a-ce'æ, 1 yū-krif"i-shē'i; 2 yu-crĭf"i-shē'e, n. pl. Bot. A monotypic family of trees of the order Hypericales. See Eucryphia.— eu-cryph"a-ceous, a.

eu-cry'ptite, 1 yū-krip'tait; 2 yu-crỹp'tit, n. Mineral. A white transparent lithium-aluminum silicate ($LiAlSiO_4$) isomorphous with nepheline, crystallizing in the hexagonal system. [< Gr. eukryptos, easily hidden, < eu, well, + kryptō, hide.]

eu-cyc'lic, 1 yū-sik'lik; 2 yu-cỹc'lic, a. Bot. Having the same number of members in each whorl, and the members of each whorl alternate: said of flowers. [< Eu- + Gr. kyklikos; see Cyclic.]

eu-dæ'mon, eu"dæ-mo'ni-a, etc. See Eudemon, etc.

eu-de'mon, 1 yu-dī'man: 2 yu-dē'mon, n. 1. A good demon or genius. 2. Astrol. The eleventh celestial house, that of friends. [< Gr. eudaimōn, fortunate, < eu, well, + daimōn, spirit.]

eu"de-mo'ni-a, 1 yū"di-mō'n-ə; 2 yu"de-mō'ni-a, n. A state of complete well-being, as defined by the philosophy of Aristotle: good fortune; true happiness, as arising from a rational satisfaction. Compare Eudemonism; Eumoiriety. eu-de'mo-ny†.

eu"de-mon'ic, 1 yū"di-mon'ik; 2 yu"de-mōn'ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or tending to produce happiness: conceived or done for the sake of happiness: as, eudæmonic morals. eu"de-mon'i-cal.— eu"de-mon'ics, n. The branch of ethics that discusses well-being and happiness: opposed to aretaics. 2. Means of comfort or happiness.

eu-de'mon-ism, 1 yu-dī'man-izm; 2 yu-dē'mon-izm, n. Ethics. The ethical theory which makes well-being, or the pursuit, enjoyment, and production of happiness, the supreme end in moral conduct.

Private eudemonism regards pure self-interest, includes hedonism, Epicureanism, and other more refined but still selfish views; public eudemonism regards the happiness of all mankind, or of universal being, as the supreme end. Compare Aristotelianism; Euthumism; Euthymia; Utilitarianism.

Metaphysical eudæmonism will not help us much.

F. D. Huntington in The Forum Oct., 1890, p. 135.

eu-de'mon-ize, 1 yū-dī'man-īz; 2 yu-dē'mon-ize, v. t. To consider happy.

eu-de"mon-ol'o-gy, 1 yū-dī"man-ol'o-ji; 2 yu-dē"mon-ōl'o-gy, n. The science, or seasoned and systematic doctrine, of human well-being or happiness. [< Gr. eudaimōn (see Eudemon) + -ology.]

Eu-de'mus, 1 yu-dī'mus; 2 yu-dē'mus, n. A Rhodian disciple of Aristotle; author or compiler of a large Ethics, etc. — Eu-de'mi-an, a.

eu-der'mol, 1 yū'dĕr-mol or -mol; 2 yu-dĕr'mōl or -mŏl, n. A lanolin ointment containing salicylate of nicotin, used for skin-diseases. [< Eu- + Gr. derma, skin, + -ol.]

eu-dī"ag-nos'tic, 1 yū-dī"ag-nas'tik; 2 yu-dī"ag-nŏs'tic, a. Easily recognized; characteristic, in petrography, not requiring the aid of a magnifying-glass to be diagnosed.

eu-dī'a-lyte, 1 yū-dī'a-lait; 2 yu-dī'a-lỹte, n. Mineral. A red, viterous, translucent monosilicate ($4NaKCaH)_3(CaFe)_3(SiZr)_3O_{27}$), crystallizing in the hexagonal system; almandin spar. [< Gr. eudialytos, easily dissolved, < eu, well, + dia, through, + lytos, loose.]

eu-dī'a-me'tric, 1 yū-dī'a-met'rik; 2 yu-dī'a-mĕt'ric, a. Chem. A graduated glass vessel used in the volumetric analysis of gases.

Originally it was used to ascertain the purity of air; hence its name. It is a graduated glass tube of uniform caliber, either straight, V-shaped, or U-shaped, closed at one end, in which platinum wires are Eudi-inserted to permit the passage of an elec-ometer. tric spark to effect the chemical union of the gases contained.

[< Gr. eudios, serene (< eu, well, + dios, heavenly), + metron, measure.] — eu"di-o-met'ric, a. Of, pertaining to, or determined by or with the use of the eudiometer.— eu"di-o-met'ri-cal-ly, adv.— eu"di-om'e-try, n. Chem. The art or process of using the eudiometer.

eu"di-pleu'ral, 1 yū"di-plū'ral; 2 yu"di-plu'ral, a. Bot. Bilaterally symmetrical. [< Eu- + Gr. dis (< dyo, two), double, + pleura, side.]

Eu'dist, 1 yū'dist; 2 yu'dĭst, n. R. C. Ch. One of a French missionary order founded in 1643 by Jean Eudes.

eud'no-phite, 1 yūd'no-fait; 2 yud'nō-fỹte, n. Mineral. A dimorphous variety of analcite that crystallizes in the orthorhombic system. [< Eu- + Gr. dnophos, darkness.]

Eu-do'ci-a, 1 yu-dō'shi-ə; 2 yu-dō'shi-a, n. The Roman empress Athenais; born at Athens. [Gr. eudokia, satisfaction or approval.] Eu-do-ki'aĭ [Gr.].

Eu-do'ra, 1 yu-dō'rə; 2 yu-dō'ra, n. A feminine personal name. Do'ra (dim.). F. Eu"dore', 1 Ū"dōr', 2 ū'dor'; L. Eu-do'ræ [Gr., good gift.]

Eu"do-ri'na, 1 yu"do-raĭ'nə; 2 yu"do-rī'na, n. Bot. A genus of chlorophyceous algæ often found in small numbers in reservoirs of drinking-water. If abundant they give the water a faint fishy odor.

Eu-dox'i-an, 1 yu-dŏks'i-ən; 2 yu-dŏks'i-a, n. & a. Pertaining to Eudoxius, a bishop of Constantinople in the 4th century, or characterized by his extreme Arian views.

II. n. A believer in the views of Eudoxius; an Aetian.

eu-dox'i-form, 1 yu-dŏks'i-fōrm; 2 yu-dŏks'i-fōrm, a. Having the characteristics of a eudoxome. [< Gr. eudoxos, of good repute, + -form.]

eu-dox'ine, 1 yu-dŏks'in; 2 yu-dŏks'in, n. Pharm. A bismuth salt of nosophen used for diarrhœa, dyspepsia, etc. [< Gr. eudoxos of good repute.] eu-dox'ine‡.

eu-dox'ome, 1 yu-dŏks'ōm; 2 yu-dŏks'ōm, n. The cormidium of a calyconectous siphonophorous hydromedusan consisting typically of a bell-swimmer, gastrozooid with its tentacle, and medusiform gonophores. [< Gr. eudoxos, of good repute.]

Eu-dox'us, 1 yu-dŏks'us; 2 yu-dŏks'ŭs, n. (406?–350? B. C.) A Greek astronomer and mathematician, who first determined the length of the year. Eu'do-xus‡ [Gr.].

Eu-drom'a-des, 1 yu-drom'a-dīz; 2 yu-drŏm'a-dēş, n. pl. Ornith. An order of long-winged, long-legged, swimming and other grallatorial birds. [Gr. eudromias, good runner, < eu, well, + dramein, run.] — eu-drom'a-dine, a.

eu-dy'a-lite, 1 yu-daĭ'ə-laĭt; 2 yu-dỹ'a-lit, n. Mineral. Same as Eudialyte: an erroneous form.

Eu-ech"l-noi'de-a, 1 yū-ek"l-noi'di-ə; 2 yu-ĕc"l-nōi'de-a, n. pl. Echin. A primary division or subclass of echinoideans with two vertical rows of plates in each interradium and two rows of plates in each ambulacrum, including all living forms. [< Eu- + Gr. echinos, hedgehog, + -oid.]— eu-ech"l-noid'e-an, a. & n.

eu-em'er-ism, -ist, etc. Same as Euhemerism, etc.

eu-e'mi-a, ‖ 1 yu-ī'mi-ə; 2 yu-ē'mi-a, n. A sound or healthy condition of the blood. [< Eu- + Gr. haima, blood.]

Eu-er'c-ta, 1 yu-er'i-tə; 2 yu-ĕr'e-ta, n. pl. Herp. A division of chelonians with paddle-like limbs, including the chelonioids and dermochelyids. [< Eu- + Gr. eretēs, rower, < eressō, row.]

Eu-er'ge-tes, 1 yu-ĭr'ĭ-tīz; 2 yu-ĕr'ge-tēş, n. [Gr.] Benefactor: a title of honor conferred by Greek states.

Eu-er'ge-tes, n. Bib. (Apocrypha). Ecclus. (prolog). xxii, 25.

eu"es-the'si-a, ‖ 1 yū"es-thī'si-ə or -zi-ə; 2 yu"ĕs-thī'si-a or -zi-a, n. Same as Euæsthesia.

eu"es-the'sia, 1 yū"es-thī'si-ə, n. A sound or healthy condition of all the senses. [< Eu- + Esthesia.]

Eu-fau'la, 1 yu-fô'lə; 2 yu-fa'la, n. A city in Barbour county, Ala.

eu-gal'lol, 1 yu-gal'ol or -ol; 2 yu-găl'ol or -ŏl, n. Pharm. A clear syrupy substance ($C_3H_3(OH)_2OCOCH_3$), applied externally in psoriasis; acetyl pyrogallol. [< Eu- + (Pyro)gallol.]

Eu"ga-noi'de-i, 1 yū"ga-noi'di-aĭ; 2 yu"gă-nōi'de-i, n. pl. Ich. A group of ganoids, including the bony forms, as the garpikes. [< Eu- + Ganoidei.]— eu"ga-noid, a. & n.

eu'gas, interj. Good! Excellent! Well done!

Eu-gene', 1 yu-jīn' or yū'jin; 2 yu-ĝēn' or yu'ĝēn, n. 1. A masculine personal name. Eu-ge'ni-a (fem.). Gene (dim.). F. Eu-gè'nie, Ū-ĝe'nī; Sp. Eu-ge'nio, e-ĥe'nī-o; P. Eu"gène, Ū"ĵèn'. 2 Ū"ĵèn'; G. Eu-gen', 1 oi-ĝēn', 2 oi-ĝen'. Eu-ge'ni-us, 1 oi-ĝē'ni-ŭs, 2 oi-ĝē'ni-us; L. Eu-ge'ni-us, 1 ĕ'u-ĵē'ni-ŭs, 2 ĕ'u-ĝe'ni-us; Fr. Eu"ge-nè'ne, 1 ĕ"u-ĵē'nē', 2 ĕ"u-ĝe'nē'; Sp. E"u-ge-ni'o, 1 ĕ"u-ĥē'nī-o, 2 ĕ"u-ĥe'nī-o; Sw. E"u-ge'ni-us, 1 ĕ"u-ĝē'ni-ŭs, 2 ĕ"u-ĝe'ni-us. [< Gr. eugenēs, well-born, < eu, well, + genos, race.] — eu-gen'ĭ-cal-ly, adv.

eu-gen'ics, 1 yu-jen'iks; 2 yu-ĵĕn'ics, n. 1. The science and art of improving the human race by applying the ascertained laws of inheritance of characteristics to the selection of marriage mates, with the aim of securing to the offspring a desirable combination of traits, including resistance to diseases to which parents have been used by Sir Francis Calton in 1883 ; stirpiculture.

Against eugenics it is urged that it is a fatalistic doctrine and deprives life of the stimulus towards effort.

Dr. C. B. Davenport The Popular Science Monthly Jan., '11.

2. The science which aims at improving the breed of plants and animals by prudent selection in crossing, and by mating the healthiest individuals. Compare euthenics.

— negative eugenics, the science and art of preventing the procreation of weak and defective persons, including the practice of segregation: the sexes during the reproductive period and rendering sterile the highly unfit.— eu'ge-nist, n.

Eu"ge-nie', 1 yū"ĵi-nī'; 2 yu"ĝe-nī', n. Eugénie Marie de Montijo de Guzman (1/1826–7/11920), empress of France, wife of Napoleon III.; resident in England after 1870. [See Eugenia.]

eu'ge-nin, 1 yū'ĵi-nin; 2 yu'ĝe-nin, n. Chem. A pearly crystalline compound, isomeric with eugenol, contained in the watery distillate of cloves or oil of cloves; clove-camphor. [< Eugenia + -in.]

eu'ge-nism, 1 yū'ĵi-nizm; 2 yu'ĝe-nizm, n. The combination of circumstances and conditions best calculated to produce well-being. [< Gr. eugenēs; see Eugenics.]

Eu-ge'ni-us IV., 1 yu-ĵī'ni-us; 2 yu-ĝē'ni-ŭs (1383?–2/21 1447). Gabriello Condulmerio, Pope, 1431–1447, then deposed by the Council of Basel.

eu-gen'o-form, 1 yu-ĵen'o-fōrm; 2 yu-ĝĕn'o-fōrm, n. Chem. A colorless crystalline compound ($C_2H_3C_6H_2(OCH_3)_2(ONa)(CH_2O)H_2O$), arising from the action of formaldehyde on eugenol-sodium: employed as an intestinal antiseptic. [< Eugenol + Formaldehyde.]

eu'ge-nol, 1 yū'ĵi-nōl or -nol; 2 yu'ĝe-nōl or -nŏl, n. Chem. A colorless oil ($C_6H_3(C_3H_5)OH$), of spicy odor and burning taste contained in oil of cloves, oil of bay, and other oils; eugenic acid. [< Eugenia + L. oleum; see Oil.]— eu'ge-nol-ac'et-an'i-da, n. Chem. A crystalline compound ($C_6H_3C_3H_5(OCH_3)(OCOCH_3)$), arising from the interaction of eugenol-sodium and chloracetamid, employed as a local antiseptic.— e.-iodid, n. Chem. A reddish powder ($C_{20}H_{32}O_4I_2$), obtained by the action of iodin in potassium iodid on eugenol-sodium. It finds application as a powerful antiseptic.— e.-sodium, n. Chem. A crystalline compound, $C_{10}H_{11}O_2Na$. sodium eugenolate.

eu'ge-nyl, n. Nobility of birth.

Eu"ge-og'e-nous, 1 yū"ĵi-oj'i-nus; 2 yu"ĝe-ŏĝ'e-nŭs, a. Geol. Yielding easily to disintegration; decomposing readily into soil: contrasted with dysgeogenous. [< Eu- + Gr. gē, earth, + -genous.]

eu'get'ic, 1 yū-jet'ik; 2 yu-ĝĕt'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from eugenol. eu'ge-tin'ic.— eugetic acid, a colorless crystalline compound ($C_{11}H_{12}O_4$) contained in eugenol.

eugh†, eugh'ent. Same as Yew, Yewen.

Eu-gle'na, 1 yu-glī'nə; 2 yu-glē'na, n. Protoz. 1. A genus typical of Euglenida. 2. [e.] An infusorian of this genus. [< Eu- + Gr. glanē, pupil of the eye.]— euglena phase, a phase of sporozoans, usually motile, with a sac-like contractile wall.

Eu-glen'i-dæ, 1 yu-glen'i-dī; 2 yu-glĕn'i-dē, n. pl. Protoz. A family of euglenoidean infusorians with endoplasm brilliantly green, chiefly occurring in fresh water. [< Euglena.]— eu-glen'id, n.— eu-glen'oid. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Euglenidæ; especially, undergoing encystment like a euglenid. II. n. One of the Euglenidæ.— Eu"gle-noi'de-a, *n. pl. Figuratively: (1) Of things, to pass off or away like vapor; as, his courage evaporated. (2) Of persons, humorously, to subside and disappear; as, whereupon he evaporated. [< LL. evaporatus, pp. of evaporo, < L. e, out, + vapor, vapor.] e-va'por†; e-va'por-ize†.—e-vap"o-ra-bil'i-ty, n.—e-vap'o-ra-bl(e', a.—e-vap'o-rate, a. [Rare.] Dispersed in vapor; evaporated.—e-vap'o-ra-tiv(e, a. Pertaining to or causing evaporation.

e-vap'o-rat"ing, ppr. & verbal n. of EVAPORATE, v.—e-vap'o-rat"ing-scone', n. An evaporator for sirup: a double-walled inverted cone, by which the sirup, against the inner surface in a film, is heated by steam between the walls.—e-dish, n. A shallow dish, as of porcelain, used by chemists for heating and evaporating fluids.—e. furnace, n. A furnace used in connection with machinery for evaporating, as in sugar-making.—e. pan, n. A shallow pan specially used, in the manufacture of sugar or salt, in evaporating saccharine fluids, brine, etc.

e-vap'o-ra'tion, 1 i-vap'o-rē'shon; 2 e-văp'o-rā'ṣhon, n. 1. The act or process of changing or being changed into vapor; a rising of or from vapor. 2. Vapor.

In the process of evaporation from the sea, fresh water only is taken, the salts are left behind.

M. F. MAURY Physical Geography p. 17. [c. a & r. 1860.]

2. The act of drying or concentrating by expelling moisture; as, the evaporation of sirup or fruit. 3. [Rare.] The result of evaporation; vapor. 4. In algebra, the increase to infinity of a solution of a set of simultaneous equations, when the constant quantities are given certain values. [< LL. evaporatio(n-), < evaporo; see EVAPORATE.] —e-vap"o-ra'tion-gage', n. A graduated glass vessel used to test the rate of evaporation.—e. tank, n. An open tank of water, used for measuring the evaporation from a natural liquid surface.—multiple-effect e. (Physics), a system under which in succession of evaporating vessels vapor given off by one is used to raise the temperature of the liquid in the next: employed largely in sugar-refining.

e-vap'o-ra"tor, 1 i-vap'o-rē"tar or -ter; 2 e-văp'o-rā"tor, n. 1. An apparatus for evaporating water into steam; in gasolene engines, a device for transmuting the liquid hydrocarbon into a vapor or gas, either by means of heat or by fine subdivision in an air-current; a device for drying substances, as fruits, or for concentrating liquids, by evaporation; an evaporating = furnace or an evaporating-pan; specif.,

Maple-sap Evaporator.

The maple-sap is placed in the storage in the sugar-making, s, and flows through the heated series of heated pans, pipe, h, to the discharge-pipe, d, where it is delivered to the evaporating-pan, e, and the heat from the fire in the grate, g, completes the work. The smoke passes out at p.

And sat, and wished, and sighed for evensong.

JEAN INGELOW Mariner's Cave st. 38.

3. A song sung in the evening; an evening hymn. [< AS. ǣfensang, < ǣfen, evening, + sang, song.]

e-ven't†, n. To cool; expose to the air; fan.

e-vent', 1 i-vent'; 2 ē-vĕnt', n. 1. Anything that happens or comes to pass, as distinguished from a thing that exists; any becoming, happening, or changing; an occurrence or incident, especially when of some importance; as, the shadow of coming events; a great event.

Marriage is a serious affair! . . . The most serious. It is the principal event for good or for evil in all lives.

DISRAELI Endymion vol. ii, p. 195. [r. 1880.]

e-vent'ful, 1 i-vent'ful; 2 ē-vĕnt'ful, a. Attended or characterized by important or noteworthy events; full of remarkable incidents, accidents, or changes; momentous; important.

Printing . . . was a revolution in the history of literature more eventful than any in the history of mankind.

MAS. ARNOLD Chips vol. iii, p. 23. [n. 1874.]

e-vent'less, 1 i-vent'les; 2 ē-vĕnt'lĕs, a. Without events or noteworthy occurrences; uneventful; monotonous.— — e-vent'less-ly, adv.— e-vent'less-ness, n.

Ev'e-ton-tog'na-thi, 1 ev'i-ton-tog'nə-thai; 2 ĕv'e-tŏn-tŏg'na-thī, pl. Ich. A division of teleost fishes, especially a suborder of plectospondyles with the cranial cavity produced between the orbits and falciform pharyngeal bones, as in the carps, etc. [< Gr. ēs, well, + entos, within, + gnathos, jaw.]— ev'en-tog'nath, n.— ev'en-tog'na-thous, a.

e'ven-tra'tion, 1 i'ven-trē'shən; 2 ē'vĕn-trā'shon, n. Pathol. (1) The condition resulting from protrusion of a portion of the contents of the abdominal cavity through the porting muscles, forming a tumor within the relaxed abdominal walls. (2) A ventral hernia at either the anterior or lateral portion of the abdomen. (3) Escape of the intestines from the abdominal cavity through an extensive abdominal wound. 2. The act of disemboweling, or the state of being disemboweled; evisceration. [< e- + L. venter (ventr-), belly.]

e-ven'tu-al, 1 i-ven'chu-əl or -tiu-əl; 2 ē-vĕn'chu-al or -tū-al, a. 1. Happening or to happen in the end and as a result; pertaining to or being a result or issue; consequential; ultimate; final. 2. Dependent upon a final contingency; ultimately possible; contingent; as, an eventual succession.

The small states . . . wished to keep the eventual choice [of a President] in the hands of the Senate.

PARKE GOD. Period of Am. Hist. p. 283. [n. m. & co.]

e-ven'tu-al'i-ty, 1 i-ven'chu-(or -tiu-)al'i-ti; 2 ē-vĕn'chu-[or -tū-]al'i-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tis, pl.] 1. The character of happening contingently or as a result; a possible occurrence or event; a consequential event or issue. 2. Phren. The faculty by which one is enabled or disposed to take note of and remember events, or the organ which is the seat of this faculty.

e-ven'tu-al-ly, 1 i-ven'chu-(or -tiu-)əl-i; 2 ē-vĕn'chu-[or -tū-]al-y, adv. In the end or event; as the final result or outcome; ultimately.

Some of the lower Annelids, as the Naïs, may be cut into thirty or forty pieces, and each piece will eventually become a perfect animal.

SPENCER Biology vol. i, pt. ii, p. 175. [a. 1872.]

e-ven'tu-ate, 1 i-ven'chu-ət or -tiu-ēt; 2 ē-vĕn'chu-āt or -tū-āt, v. [-ATED; -ATING.] I. i. To have a regular event or issue; turn out; terminate; culminate (in some result); as, the discussion eventuated in a compromise. 2. To be the event or issue; come to pass; happen; result; as war eventuated from the dispute. II. t. [Rare.] To bring to and end or to the event; terminate. [< L. eventus; see EVENT.]

And very like donate in eventuate. Event has no true synonym: eventuate expresses an idea not otherwise expressible by a single word; and, as pertains to its form, it sorts with accentuate and graduate. Eventuate justified, eventuation is justified, inclusively.

e-ven'tu-a'tion, 1 i-ven'chu-(or -tiu-)ē'shən; 2 ē-vĕn'chu-[or -tū-]ā'shon, n. The act or result of eventuating; issue; realization.

ev'er, 1 ev'er; 2 ĕv'er, adv. 1. At any time; at any period or moment; on any occasion; in any case; as, have you ever seen the Capitol? shall we ever meet again?

In all her annals, no person was ever born a slave on the soil of Massachusetts. SUMNER Speeches and Addresses, Defence of Mass. p. 350. fr. a fr. 1866.)

2. At all times; under all circumstances; on every occasion; through all time, past or future, within given limit or without limits; eternally; perpetually; always; as, he is ever the same; ever since I was a child; fortune was ever upon his side; God is ever existent.

Ever, in this sense, is the first element in many self-explaining compounds; as, ever-blessed, ever-blooming, etc.

3. In any degree; at all, or in any case: used for emphasis; as, as soon as ever he had done it; he ran as fast as ever he could.

This word is misused for never in such an example as "We seldom or ever see those forsaken who trust in God," which should be "seldom or never." But "seldom if ever" would be correct; i. e., "in few or no instances" or "in few if any." [< AS. ǽfre; cp. á: see EACH.] ever amongt, every now and then.— e. a, e. any, by any chance; at all.— e. and anon, now and then; at one time and at another; repeatedly.— e. a one [Eng.], either of two; whichever one; any one.— e. in one, always; constantly.— e. so, in or to whatever conceivable degree or extent; very; as, he is ever so strong; the patient is ever so much better.— for e., eternally. Every expresses the idea of all considered distributively. It should not, however, be used in the place of the expression "I have every confidence in him" may be employed to mean "I have entire (or, not so properly, all) confidence in him": an incorrect usage, which it distributive, therefore, the number of things that may be considered separately, while confidence is used as a mass-noun; or it may mean "I have every kind, or every degree of, confidence": a recent literary usage not uncommon in good English. Frequently, also, it indicates repetition, as of successive individuals; as, every hour the clock struck; every minute the watch ticked; the restless place; every tenth man was taken; there was a fire every third day. It is often used hyperbolically in emphatic general assertions; as, every human being knows this. It is sometimes followed by a superlative preceded by the with the sense of 'even the'; as, in every, the least, particular.

Every kernel has its shell, Every chime its harshest bell.
HOLMES Programme st. 15.

2. All possible; very great; as, to show one every consideration. 3. Legal. Every one; all; as, to all and every: used substantivally. 4†. Any. [ME. everi, ever-ich, < AS. ǽfre ġelċ (see EACH, ILK); Scel. sa. EALL.]

To prove; evince. 4†. To annul or set aside. 5†. To extort or compel, as consent. [< L. evictus, pp. of evinco, overcome, < e, out, + vinco, conquer.] SYN.: see BANISH.— e-vict'or, n.

e-vic'tion, 1 ę-vik'shun; 2 ę-vĭc'shŏn, n. 1. The act of evicting; forcible ousting of one from the possession of lands or tenements, by warrant of judicial decree or by virtue of a paramount title; ejectment; hence, any forcible expulsion or driving out; as, the eviction of a tenant.

Eviction was in full swing, and between eviction and emigration it is estimated that almost a million of people left Ireland between 1847 and 1851.
MCCARTHY Short Hist. Ireland ch. 9, p. 121. [z. a. A. 1880.]

ev'idence, 1 ev'i-dens; 2 ĕv'ĭ-dĕnç, vt. [-DENCED; -DENCING.] 1. To make evident or plain; show clearly; prove. 2†. To attest by evidence.— ev'i-denc-er, n. A witness.

ev'i-dence, n. 1. That which makes evident, whether taken singly or collectively; any ground or reason for knowledge or certitude in knowledge; proof, whether immediate or derived by inference; a fact or body of facts on which a proof, belief, or judgment is based; as, evidence of the authorship of a book; evidence of the existence of matter. See KNOW; KNOWLEDGE.

Evidence, in the wide sense, embraces — (1) self-evidence, as that of axioms, intuitive truths, and knowledge by sense-perception and sense-consciousness; (2) derivative evidence, as that of necessary deductions from established truths; (3) probable or moral e., which in various degrees falls short of demonstration, as that of the ordinary processes of observation and thought, or from authority or testimony.

Evidence is and must be the test of truth, and is, I suppose, the ultimate ground on which we believe anything.
MIVART Nature and Thought ch. 4, p. 133. [z. p. & co. 1882.]

2. Law. That by means of which an allegation in a cause is proved or disproved, or a fact is established or sought to be established, including both oral testimony offered and the documents submitted. Compare PROOF; TESTIMONY.

The word evidence, in its legal acceptation, includes all the means by which any alleged matter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to investigation, is established or disproved.
GREENLEAF Evidence vol. i, pt. i, ch. 1, p. 3. fr. a. o. 1858.]

Tell me what evidence is, and I shall be able to understand why you say that this and that class of facts are not evidence. The question "What is evidence?" gradually disclosed the ambiguity of the word. To describe a matter of fact as 'evidence' in the sense of testimony is obviously nonsense. . . . Judicial evidence is only one case of the general problem of science — namely, inferring the unknown from the known. . . . The Law of Evidence is that part of the Law of Procedure, which, with a view to ascertain individual rights and liabilities in particular cases, decides (1) what facts may and what may not be proved in such cases; (2) what sort of evidence of those facts which may be proved; (3) by whom and in what manner the evidence must be produced by which any fact is to be proved.
SIR JAMES FITZJAMES STEPHEN Digest of the Law of Evidence 2d Am. ed., edited by George Chase. EDITOR 1898.]

3. Testimony; affirmation. 4. [Rare.] A person or thing that witnesses or bears testimony. 5. [Rare.] Evidentness; plainness. [OF., < L. evidentia, clearness, < eviden(t-)s, clear, < e, out, + videre, see.]

SYN.: see CERTAINTY; DEMONSTRATION; PROOF.— circumstantial evidence, evidence consisting of circumstances which furnish reasonable ground for believing or deciding as to the existence of fact, or the guilt or innocence of an accused person.— direct e., evidence tending to establish an allegation of fact directly, without inference or presumption, as by an eye-witness.— external e., evidence, as for the truth of a document or work of literature or art, brought from outside sources, as from history, tradition, etc.— indirect e., that evidence which corroborates facts from which the principal fact may be inferred.— in e. 1.

Received in a case as legal and competent proof. 2. Perfectly plain; apparent.—internal e., the evidence of the genuineness and authenticity of a document or work of literature or art furnished by its structure, contents, or character.—King's e., Queen's e., Crown's e., same as STATE'S EVIDENCE.—legal e., evidence admissible material to the proof or disproof of the point or points at issue in a lawsuit.—presumptive e., evidence from which, in the absence of direct proof, a fact is presumed to exist; prima facie e., evidence which, if unanswered or uncontradicted, would establish the fact alleged.—primary e., the best evidence of which the nature of the case admits.—satisfactory or sufficient e., that amount or weight of evidence which is adapted to convince a reasonable mind.—secondary e., evidence not primary, but which, having some tendency to prove the fact at issue, is received, it being first shown that the primary evidence is not obtainable.—self-regarding e. (Law), evidence in favor of or against a party supplied either by the language or behavior of the party or his attorney.—state's e., State's e. 1. One who confesses himself guilty of a crime and proffers himself as a witness to testify against his accomplices. 2. The evidence produced by the state in criminal prosecutions.

ev'i-den-cive(es), a. [Rare.] Operating as evidence.

ev'i-den-cy, n. Evidence; proof.

ev'i-dent, 1 ev'i-dənt; 2 ĕv'ĭ-dĕnt, a. 1. Plain or manifest as to the mind or the senses; clearly perceptible; obvious; indubitable; as, evident facts; his success is evident.

Matter itself is not more evident than the mind that shapes it. BUSHNELL Moral Uses of Dark Things, Of Night p. 7. ib. 1868.]

2†. Serving as evidence; conclusive. [OF., < L. evidenc(e)s; see EVIDENCE.] SYN: apparent, clear, conspicuous, distinct, manifest, visible, open, patent, perceptible, plain, tangible, unmistakable, visible. That is apparent which clearly appears to the senses or to the mind as soon as the attention is directed to it; that is evident of which the mind is made sure by some inference that supplements the facts of perception; the marks of a struggle were apparent in broken shrubbery and trampled ground, and the finding of a bloody knife and a pilfered purse made it evident that robbery and murder had been committed. That is manifest which we can lay the hand upon; manifest is thus stronger than apparent, as such is more absolute than sight; that the picture was a modern copy of an ancient work was evident, and on comparison with the original was manifestly inferior in execution. That is obvious which is directly in the way so that it can not be missed; as, the application of the remark was obvious. Visible applies to all that can be perceived by the sense of sight, whether with the naked eye or with the telescope or a microscope object. Discernible applies to that which is dimly or faintly visible, requiring strain and effort in order to be seen; as, the ship was discernible in the distance. That is conspicuous which stands out so as necessarily or strikingly to attract the attention. Palpable and tangible express more emphatically the thought of being perceived. ev'i-dent-ly, adv. In a manner to be perceived or understood; obviously; clearly; in a manner to convince the mind; manifestly; certainly.—ev'i-dent-ness, n.

ev'i-den-tial [Rare], evidence. 2. Scots Law. A title-deed, writ, or other documentary evidence serving to prove property.

ev'i-den'tial, 1 ev'i-den'shal; 2 ĕv'ĭ-dĕn'shal, a. Of the nature of or furnishing evidence; indicative. ev'i-den'tia-ry.

[A] verdict may be put in evidence as a mere evidentiary fact, not as in any way showing that the verdict was true but simply as proving that it was taken. F. WHARTON Law of Evidence vol. ii. 3d ed. 1888. p. 1881. [< L. evidentia; see EVIDENCE.] —ev'i-den-tial-ly, adv. In an evidential manner; as evidence.

e'vil, 1 ī'vĭl; 2 ē'vĭl, a. 1. Morally bad; wrong or wicked; sinful or depraved; malevolent; corrupt; as, an evil deed. 2. Possessing injurious nature or qualities; unwholesome; hurtful; hostile to the welfare of any creature; mischievous; also, of poor or bad quality; worthless; as, an evil report; an evil life. 3. Characterized by calamity, trouble, or sorrow; sorrowful; disastrous; as, evil news; evil days. 4. Of ill repute; deserving of condemnation; shameful; as, an evil name. 5†. Poor; unskilful. [OE. yvel, evel, yuel, euel, uel, < AS. yfel, efel, uel, evil.] e'vel; e'vill. SYN: see BAD; PERNICIOUS; SINFUL.

Evil is used as the first element in self-explaining compounds; as, evil-doing, -disposed, -favored, -mindedness, -speaking, -tongued, -wishing, -wishes, -workers, especially the French, residing in the city.—e.-minded, a. Having an evil disposition; wicked; malicious.—e.-mindedness, n.—e.-speaking, n. Censorious or spiteful comments upon others; defamation; calumny; slander.—e.-starred, a. Same as ILL-STARRED.

Where in wild Mahratta-battle fell my father evil-starr'd;
I was left a trampled orphan, and a selfish uncle's ward.
TENNYSON Locksley Hall st. 78.

—e.-willing, a. Wishing evil.—the e.-eye. 1. The supposed faculty of harming by spiteful looks unconsciously attributed to certain persons as a natural endowment; much dreaded in Mediterranean Europe, the Levant, and the East in general, where charms are commonly used against it, as for the protection of children, cattle, etc. Compare BANSHEE.

He certainly possesses the gift of the evil eye,' said Clodius.
BULWER-LYTTON Last Days of Pompeii bk. ii. ch. 3. [c. 1834.]

2. A spiteful or malicious look.—the e. one, Satan.

e'vil, n. 1. Wicked conduct or disposition as showing depravity or as being destructive of good; sinfulness as injurious; moral depravity; as, prone to evil.

Moral evil is the only real evil; it was necessary in view of human freedom. DARWINISM Hist. Philos. tr. by Morris, vol. i, pt. ii. § 85. p. 326. [c. 1872.]

2. Something that harms or hurts; that which hinders prosperity, diminishes welfare, or prevents the enjoyment of a good; affliction; as, war is an evil.

The evil that men do lives after them.
SHAKESPEARE Julius Cæsar act iii, sc. 2.

3. [Rare.] A scrofulous malady; as, the king's evil; the pell-evil. 4†. A vicious or hurtful act.

SYN.: see ABOMINATION; INJURY; SIN.—king's evil, scrofula: once supposed to be curable by a monarch's touch.—royal e., same as king's evil.—social e., sexual impurity; prostitution.

e'vil, n. [Prov. Eng.] 1. A hayfork; fork. 2. A hatchet.

e'vil, adv. In an evil manner; unkindly; harmfully; ill. [< AS. yfele, < yfel, evil.]

e'vil-ly, 1 ī'vĭl-ı; 2 ē'vĭl-y, adv. In an evil manner; maliciously; badly.

E'vil-me-ro'dach, 1 ī'vĭl-mı-rō'dak or -mer'o-dak; 2 ē'vĭl-me-rō'dac or -mĕr'o-dăc, n. Bib. 2 Kings xxv, 27.

e'vil-ness, 1 ī'vĭl-nes; 2 ē'vĭl-nĕs, n. The state or quality of being evil.

e'vince, 1 ı-vins'; 2 ĭ-vĭns', v. [E-VINCED'; E-VINCING. [L. evincere, < e, out, + vincere, conquer.] t. 1. To show plainly the same, be a proof of; manifest certainty; Touch-piece given by Queen Anne to Dr. Samuel Johnson, when she touched him for the King's Evil. (British Museum.)

make manifest or evident; 2. To conquer.

show; as, to evince ignorance; evince a purpose. 3†. To conquer.

ill†, a. To furnish proof. [< L. evinco; see EVICT.]

SYN.: see DISPLAY.—e-vince'ment, n. The act of evincing.—e-vinc'i-bil'i-ty, n. Capable of being shown or proved.—e-vinc'i-bly, adv.—e-vin'civ(es), a. Capable of proving; tending to prove; convincing.

e'v-rat'er, n. To emasculate.

e'v-ra'tion, 1 ē-vē'shən; 2 ē'vĭ-rā'shon, a. Pathol. 1. Loss of masculinity, with a correspondingly assumption of feminine characteristics. 2. Sexual impotence in the male. 3. Castration. [< L. evirātio, < e, out, + vir, man.]

e-vir'tu-ate, v. To use exertion; to deprive of power.

e-vis'cer-ate, 1 ı-vĭs'er-āt; 2 ē-vĭs'ĕr-āt, vt. [-AT'ED; -AT'ING.] 1. To remove the entrails of or from; disembowel; gut; figuratively, to rob of indispensable or important parts, as a principle or a scheme. 2. To remove (vital parts). 3. To unbosom completely; lay bare, as oneself mentally. [< L. exscarnare, pp. of exscerno, < ex, out, + viscera, inner parts.]—e-vis'cer-a'tion, n.

1. The act of eviscerating. 2. Surg. Removal of the interior of the eyeball, only the sclerotic coat being left.

e-vis'cer-o-ness-rot'o-my, 1 ı-vĭs'er-o-nĭs-rot'o-mı; 2 ē-vĭs'ĕr-o-nĕs-rŏt'o-my, n. Surg. The excision of the internal parts of the eyeball, accompanied by severing of the optic nerve.

ev't-la-ble, 1 ı-vı't-la-bl; 2 ĭv'ĭ-ta-bl, a. That may be

ev't-ter'nal, 1 ev'ı-tĕr'nal; 2 ĕv'o-ĕ-tĕr'nal, a. Everlasting; eternal. ev't-ter'nal-ly, adv. ev't-ter'nal-ness, n. ev't-ter'nal-i-ty, n. Eternity.

e-vit'ate, 1 ı-vı't-ēt; 2 ē-vĭt'āt, a. Bot. Without vittæ or oil tubes.

Ev'i-us, 1 ev'ı-us; 2 ĕv'ĭ-us, n. An epithet of Dionysos; derived from the cry of Bacchanals at his feasts. See EVOE.

ev'o-ca-bl(e), 1 ev'o-ka-bl; 2 ĕv'o-ca-bl, a. Capable of being evoked or called forth. [< L. evocabilis; see EVOKE.]

ev'o-cate, 1 ev'o-kēt; 2 ĕv'o-cāt, vt. [Rare.] To evoke or call out; summon forth. [< L. evocatus, pp. of evoco; see EVOKE.]

ev'o-ca'tion, 1 ev'o-kā'shon; 2 ĕv'o-cā'shon, n. 1. A calling forth or out; summoning; an evoking. 2. Civ. Law. The transference of a suit from a lower to a higher tribunal. 3. The summoning of a spirit from the grave; a formula used in such invocations. 4. Philos. In Plato's theory of reminiscence, a calling-up of knowledge acquired in a previous existence. 5. Rom. Antiq. The calling upon the gods of a besieged city to forsake it and aid the besiegers.

e-vo'ca-tive(s), 1 ı-vō'ka-tĭv or ı-vok'o-tĭv; 2 e-vō'ca-tĭv or e-vŏc'o-tĭv, a. Evoking; fitted to evoke.

e-vo'ca-tor, 1 ev'o-kē'tor or -tor; 2 ĕv'o-cā'tor, n. One who summons up spirits.—e-voc'a-to-ry, a.—e-voc'a-trix, n. A female evocator. [ev'o-hē'.

ev'o-e, 1 ev'o-ē; 2 ĕv'o-ē, interj. A cry uttered by Bacchanals.

ev'o-ke(s), 1 ı-vōk'; 2 ē-vōk', vt. [E-VOKED'; E-VOK'ING.] To call or summon forth; call out.

A ghost, evoked unseasonably from the grave.
HAWTHORNE Scarlet Letter ch. iii. p. 139. ib. M. & CO. 1880.]

ev'o-lute, a. Bot. Unfolded; turned over at the edge.

ev'o-lute, 2 ĕv'o-lūt; 2 ĕv'o-lūt, n. Geom. A curve which is the locus of the centers of curvature of another curve, and therefore tangent to all its normals; so called because the other curve (called the involute) can be traced by the end of a string gradually unwound from it. [< L. evolutus, pp. of evolvo, unroll, < e, out, + volvo, roll.]

ev'o-lu-(il'i-ty, 1 ev'o-lū-tĭl'ı-tı; 2 ĕv'o-lu-tĭl'ĭ-ty, n. Biol. Capability, in an organism, of manifesting changes of form; evolutionary power.

ev'o-lu'tine, 1 ev'o-lū'tın or -tin; 2 ĕv'o-lu'tin or -tĭn, a. Of or pertaining to evolutility.

ev'o-lu'tion, 1 ev'o-lū'shon; 2 ĕv'o-lu'shon, n. 1. The act or process of evolving, or the state of being evolved; development or growth; as, the evolution of a plan or a system.

Forms, systems, or institutions must give place to others, either by peaceful evolution or by violent revolution.
E. ATKINSON in Century Magazine Jan., 1887, p. 424.

2. Specif., in biology: (1) The series of steps by which a germ or a rudimentary part becomes an adult organism or a fully developed part; the succession of changes by which a germ passes from a simple to a complex condition; development. (2) The derivation or the doctrine of the derivation of all forms of life by gradual modification from earlier and simpler forms or from one rudimentary form. (3) The theory that the germ preexists in the parent, and that it contains all the parts of the fully formed organism in which form; development from such a germ; opposed to epigenesis: the original use in biology.

3. Finally some consider that an epigenetic development is an impossibility. Moreover, I found an actual proof of the reality of evolution. A. WEISMANN Germ-Plasm tr. by Parker and Ronnfeldt, pref., p. 14. ls. 1893.]

Evolution, as understood to-day, is a widely comprehensive term, inasmuch as it comprises the study of that vast complex of natural conditions which has resulted in the formation and development of stellar systems and particularly of that which includes the earth as well as of all forms of plant and animal life upon our planet. Evolution in general is founded upon the unity of action exhibited in the operations of nature, while organic evolution, or the theory of descent, is built upon the fact that all animals and plants are developed by analogous processes from some form of primitive germ and show an underlying unity of organization, their physical life being based upon the living substance known as protoplasm, whose irritability is the sole cause of all their movements. Evolution may be (1) inorganic, that which treats of the growth of the material universe and follows the various stages of cosmic development down to the formation of the planets, at which stage physico-chemical evolution commences, embracing the gradual elaboration of matter from simple into more complex compounds, culminating in the most complex of all, protoplasm; (2) organic, which treats of those agencies which produce morphogenesis and upon and through which natural selection acts, including such external forces as nutrition, variation, environment, heredity, and the various chemical, physical, and physiological changes encountered by living organisms; (3) mental, which traces the gradual development of the highest intellectual faculties, as evidenced in man, from the primitive reflexes and instinctive movements of the lowest organize forms through an infinite variety of gradually advancing types of intelligence to the savage, and so upwards to the highest produces of civilization. Mental evolution also embraces the study of social evolution, which traces the highly complex system of modern organized society back to the primitive family and tribal conditions of prehistoric times. A vast mass of empirical data and corroborative facts, drawn from the fields of paleontology, geology, embryology, morphology, and allied sources, has now made it seem possible that the gap between man and the animals is merely one of degree and not of kind, and has tended to establish his descent from a now extinct gibbon-like ancestor, thus assigning him a place with the other primates in the genealogical tree which shows that the origin of living things is due to a continuous break of continuity from a few essentially simple forms, or possibly from one. Evolution holds that life is a necessary corollary of cosmic development and that it came into being by a process of natural evolution, in accordance with certain of physico-chemical laws, where the mass of the earth had cooled sufficiently to allow of it and the condensation of gases had formed water. Subsequently the first colloidal protoplasm thus formed motion, change, and the action of the primary factors during immense periods of time have eventually evolved existing and extinct types. The constant modifications thus set up have tended more and more to specialization, as conditioned by and dependent upon the concomitant structural and geographical changes of the globe. The basic laws of evolution as set out by Aristotle (350 B. C.), the Aristotle (384–322 B. C.) may be regarded as the originator of the theory of descent, which he adumbrated with surprising clearness. The system of Scholastic philosophy during medieval times prevented progress in this direction, and the subject was not reopened until Leibnitz (1646–1716) and Buffon (1708–1788) wrote of certain phases of it. Kant (1724–1820) was the true founder of evolution in the modern sense, his writings anticipating many of the main deductions of Darwin and Wallace, who in 1858 announced their theory of natural selection to their view. Darwin's Origin of Species, an epoch-making work, laid the foundation for the exhaustive modern researches of Huxley, Haeckel, Spencer, Weismann, and others, which have resulted in their general acceptance by most of the views, with some slight modifications. Herbert Spencer (1820–1903) developed the philosophical side of the subject, describing the doctrine of evolution as covering matter, motion, society, etc. See DARWINISM; GERM-PLASM; MUTATION; ORTHOGENESIS; SELECTION; WEISMANNISM.

3. Math. (1) In arithmetic or algebra, the operation of extracting a root; opposed to involution. (2) The gradual unfolding or unbending of a curve so that its end describes its involute. 4. A changing of the positions and movements of parts; a process of turning and shifting; especially, one of successive movements performed by troops or warvessels disposing them properly for some purpose, as of review or of battle; a move or maneuver.

The evolutions of the waltzers were quicted.
Pop. Tales, Red Death p. 160. [c. a c.]

5. A process in which, by a series of continuous progressive changes, a complex arrangement, agency, or organism is developed from a more or simple beginnings; as, the evolution of civilization from savagery; the evolution of a chicken from an egg.

It is a problem of interest to trace the evolution of the family into the clan, of patriarchism into democracy.
CLARK. MORRIS Am. Race ch. 7, p. 173. ls. c. c. 1888.]

With each succeeding Kingdom, evolution has changed its direction upward from the physical to the psychical, protoplasm giving way to psychoplasm.
I. K. FUNK The Next Step in Evolution p. 26. [r. & w. '92.]

6. A movement forming one of a series of complex motions, as one of the recurring movements of a machine. 7. Metaph. The doctrine which accounts for the beings and events of the physical universe in terms of the combination and recombination of material elements in motion, under the principle of the conservation of energy: distinguished by Herbert Spencer from development. Compare DEVELOPMENT.

Evolution is an integration of matter and concomitant dissipation of motion; during which the matter passes from an indefinite, incoherent homogeneity to a definite, coherent heterogeneity, and during which the retained motion undergoes a parallel transformation.
SPENCER First Principles pt. ii, ch. 17, p. 396. [a. 1883.]

Evolution is variously distinguished as materialistic evolution, which denies everything but matter and motion in the evolutionary process; agnostic e., which postulates an unknown and unknowable as the basis and explanation of the process; and theistic e., which assumes a God or a Logos back of all working out results along the unalterable line of natural law, and which is also called orthodox evolution often improperly confounded with the development theory.

8. Anything evolved or developed; also, a series unfolded or unrolled. 9†. A winding about; an intricate form or pattern. [< evolute + -ion, or evolutus; see EVOLUTE.—compound evolution (Biol.), that form of evolution in which the proximity and influence of one group affect the rate and quality of development of another.—determinate e. (Biol.), the doctrine that the change of species in accordance with the principle of natural selection is directed into predetermined channels either by the adaptiveness of the organisms themselves or because of some unavoidable natural factor.—digressive e., atavism.—kinetic e., same as NEOTOPISM.—mechanico-physical theory of e. (Biol.), the opinion, held by Nägeli, that the origin of species is due to the law of improvement, in accordance with which there is a constantly greater complexity and a progressive division of labor.—retrograde e., see REVOLUTION, 2.—spontaneous e., the unaided shifting of the position of a fetus during labor in consequence of which a shoulder-presentation is converted into a continued breech-and-shoulder presentation and delivery spontaneously effected.—tidal e. (Astron.), that evolution of the existing orbits of planets, satellites, and binary stars, assumed to be due to the tidal reactions between the movable parts of the bodies concerned, in consequence of which they withdrew farther from each other and changed the eccentricity of their orbits up to certain limits.—ev'o-lu'tion-al, a. Of, pertaining to, or resulting from evolution.—ev'o-lu'tion-al-ly, adv.—ev'o-lu'tion-ary, a. Pertaining or relating to evolution, in any sense.—ev'o-lu'tion-ism, n. The doctrine of or belief in evolution, biological or metaphysical.—ev'o-lu'tion-ist, n. One who is versed in, or pertaining to, evolutionism; as, the evolutionist philosophy.—ev'o-lu'tion-is'tic, a.—ev'o-lu'tion-ist, n. 1. A believer in biological or metaphysical evolution. 2. One skilled in evolutions, as a military officer.—ev'o-lu'tion-ize, vt. & vi. [Rare.] To produce by evolution.

ev'o-lu'tive (es), a. [ɛ'v-ō-liū'tiv; ē'v-ō-lū'tiv, a. Pertaining to or producing evolution; evolutionary.

e-volve',] v. [i-vɔlv'; ē-vɔlv'], n. [ē-vɔlvēt', ē-vɔlvd'ē; e-volv's',] E-VOLV'ING.] I. t. 1. To unfold or expand; disengage and bring to view; hence, to work out; develop; educe; as, to evolve a plan.

Ralsa evolved the person and office of his fiction out of his own consciousness; they are none of them human beings. W. C. WILKINSON Classic French Course ch. 23, p. 295. [CHAUP. 1890.]

2. Specifically, to produce by biological or metaphysical evolution; as defined by Herbert Spencer, to cause to pass from a more diffused to a more concentrated state. Compare EVOLUTION, 7.

Evolution has other meanings, some of which are incongruous with, and some even directly opposed to, the meaning here given to it . . . As ordinarily understood, to evolve is to unfold, to open and expand, to throw out, to disclose, as we understand it, the act of evolving . . . implies that its component matter has passed from a more diffused to a more concentrated state—has contracted. The antithetical word Involution would much more truly express the nature of the process.

3. To give off as a product or emanation; throw out, as gases. 4†. Math. To extract the roots of (a quantity or number).

II. i. To open or unfold. [< L. evolvo; see EVOLUTE.]

Syn.: see DEVELOP.—e-volv'a-bl(e), a.—e-volve'ment, n.—e-vol'vent, a. 1. That which evolves. 2. Math. Noting a right line whose extremity is the locus of the involute.—e-vol'vent, n. Geom. Same as INVOLUTE.—e-volv'er, n.

e-vom'i-ta'tion†, n. A vomiting. ev'o-mi'tion†.

Ev-on'y-mus,] ev-ɔn'i-mus; ē'v-ōn'y-mūs, n. Bot. A genus of ornamental shrubs of the family Celastraceæ, natives of temperate regions. They have opposite, entire or serrate leaves, small flowers, and capsules containing 1 or 2 seeds inclosed in an orange-colored aril. E. americana is the strawberry-bush. E. atropurpurea the burning-bush. or wahoo. The showy species, E. bungeanus and E. japonica, are common in cultivation. Compare EUONYMUS. [< L. evonymos, euonymos, of good name, < eu, well, + onyma, name.] Eu-on'y-mus†.—ev-on'y-mous, a.

Ev'o-ra,] ev'ō-ra; ē'v-ō-rā, n. 1. A district in Alemtejo province, Portugal; 2,738 sq. m. 2. Its capital town.

e-vo'vae,] i-wō'vi; ē-wō'vē. n. A mnemonic formula e-u'ræ,] for the sounding of a Gregorian tone. [< the vowels of seculorum amen, last two words of the Gloria Patri.]

E-vox'y-me-to'pon,] i-vɔks'i-mi-tō'pon; ē-vōks'y-me-tō'pon, n. A genus of West-Indian lepidopodoid fishes. [< EU- + Gr. oxys, sharp, + metōpon, brow.]

E'vreux',] ē'vrē'; ē-vrē', n. A historic cathedral city, the capital of Eure department, France. It was taken from the Romans by Clovis; plundered by the Northmen under Rollo in 892, burned by Henry I. of England in 1119, and later was the scene of many conflicts between the English and the French during the reigns of Henry V. and Henry VI. of England.

e-vul'sion,] i-vul'shan; ē-vul'shon, n. Med. [Rare.] The operation of plucking out; extirpation, as of teeth.

e-vul'siv(e),] i-vul'siv; ē-vul'siv, a. Of or used for evulsion.

Ev. Un., abbr. Evangelical Union.

ew'e, n. The yew. ewe.

ew'age†, n. 1. A precious stone having the limpidity of water. 2. A toll paid for water-passage.

E'wald,] ē'wɑlt; ē'vɑlt, n. 1. Georg Heinrich August (b'ɪ/18103–9/1875), a German Orientalist, rationalist, and Bible critic. 2. Johannes, same as EVALD.

Ew'an,] i-yū'an; ē yu'an, n. A masculine personal name. [Celt. warrior.]

Ew'art,] yū'art; ē yu'art, n. A masculine personal name.

ew'der,] yū'der; ē yu'der, n. [Scot.] I. An unpleasant odor, as of steam from a boiling vessel. 2. A scorching heat.

ewe†, n. To give birth to lambs.

ewe',] yū; ē yu, n. A female sheep or sheep-like mammal. Compare RAM. [< AS. ēowu, ewe, sheep.] — ewe's cheese', n. Cheese manufactured from ewe's milk.—ewe-gang, n. [Scot.] A pasture for sheep.—ewe-gowan, n. [Scot.] The daisy.—ewe-lease, n. [Local, Eng.] An upland where sheep are kept in ewe-stocks, a stock thin and not arched, like that of a ewe, as that of certain horses.—ewe-necked, a.—ewe-teg, n. [Prov. Brit.] A female sheep before its first shearing.

Ewe, n. 1. A forest-dwelling West-African negro tribe. 2. A linguistic stock of typical negroes that includes, besides the Ewe proper, the Dahomans and Togos. Their speech is practically monosyllabic.

Ew'ell,] yū'el; ē yu'el, Richard Stoddert (ɔ'/1817–1/72. 1872). An American Confederate general who served with distinction at Bull Run, Antietam, the Wilderness, etc.

ew'er†,] yū'ar; ē yu'er, n. A water-pitcher with a wide mouth or spout, used especially in the toilet; also, any artistically shaped or ornamented vessel with a handle and spout. [< OF. euere, < LL. aquaria, < L. aquarius, of water, < aqua, water.]—ew'er-er†, n. One who bears water in a ewer.

Porcelain Ewer and Basin.

ew'er's, n. [Local, Eng.] An odder.

ew'er-y,] yū'ar-i; ē yu'er-y, n. [-IES; 1 -IZ; 2 -IS, pl.] [Archaic.] 1. A household apartment for keeping ewers and bowls; a scullery. 2. [Eng.] In the royal household, the place where the napery is kept and where the service of water in ewers is attended to. [< OF. euere; see EWER.] ew'ry†.

ew'est,] yū'est; ē yu'est, a. [Scot.] Near or nearest.

ewghen', n. Same as YEWEN. [remorse, or pity e'whow,] ē'hwou; ē'hwow, interj. [Scot.] A cry, as of grief.

e'wig-zeit-geist',] i ē'vig-tsait-gaist'; ē gē'vig-tsait-gīst', n. [G.] Philos. The enduring spirit; the spirit that characterizes age after age: opposed to zeitgeist.

ew'lin-drift,] yū'in-drift; ē yu'lin-drift, n. [Local, Eng.] Snow driven or drifted by the wind.

Ew'ing,] yū'ing; ē yu'ing, n. 1. Juliana Horatia Orr (ō/s 1841–9/1885), an English writer for children. 2. Thomas (ō'/1789–9/1871), an American lawyer: Secretary of the Treasury and of the Interior. 3. A village in Franklin county, Ill.; seat of Erwin College (Baptist), founded in 1867.

ewk,] yūk; ē yuk, vi. [Scot.] To itch; yuck.—ewk'y, a.

ewle†, n. Yule.

ewn,] yūn; ē yun, a. [North. Eng.] An oven.

ex,] eks; ē eks, n. [Dial.] To ask.

ex, n. [Dial.] An axe. exe†.

ex, prep. [L.] 1. From, out, out of, by reason of, etc.; used in many common Latin phrases. 2. Finances. Without the right to participate in; excluding: said of stocks, as ex bonus, ex dividend, etc. 3. Commerce. Free out of; not subject to charge until taken out of, as ex elevator, ex ship, ex store, etc.—ex all [Eng.] (Insurance), a term indicating that the conditions under which a bond is sold must not be varied by its being drawn for redemption. Without the right to modify the terms of sale of a bond when it is drawn to be redeemed. —ex new [Eng.], in finance, without right to share in an issue of new stock.—ex officio, by virtue of one's office: officially.—ex parte, on, from, or as the instance of one side only; one-sided; as, ex-parte testimony.

ex-, prefix. Out; out of; off; beyond: used also with privative and intensive force. Prefixed to a word denoting office, it denotes one who formerly occupied the position; as, ex-President; ex-convict. [< L. ex-, < ex, from; or < Gr. ex, from.]

ex., abbr. Examined, example, exception, excursus, executed, executive, export.

ex'a-bar, n. Same as EXABRUPTION.

ex'act'er-bate,] egz-ak'ter-bēt; ē eks-hak'ter-bēt; ē ēgz-[or ēks-]ĭg'zer-bāt, vt. [-BAT'ED; -BAT'ING.] To make more sharp, severe, or virulent; aggravate; exasperate; embitter; as, to exacerbate ill feeling. [< L. exacerbatus, pp. of exacerbo, < ex, intens. + acerbo, < acerbus, bitter.]

ex-ac'er-ba'tion,] egz-as'ər-bē'shan; ē ēgz-ăg'er-bā'shon, n. 1. The act of exacerbating, or the state of being exacerbated; increased severity. 2. Med. A temporary increase in violence of the symptoms of a disease.

The exacerbation is sometimes preceded by a chill.

PAINE Physiology pt. ii, ch. 1, p. 221. [a. 1858.]—ex-ac'er-bes'cence,] egz-as'ər-bes'ens; ē ēgz-ăg'er-bĕs'ens, n. A state of increasing violence, as in the symptoms of a disease. [< LL. exacerbescen(s)-, ppr. of exacerbesco, < L. exacerbo; see EXACERBATE.]—ex-ac'er-bes'cent, a. [Rare.] Irritating; exasperating; embittering.

ex-act'-nate,] egz-ak'-nēt; ē ēgz-ăk'i-nāt, vt. [Rare.] To take the kernel from; deprive of the kernel.—ex-ac'i-na'tion, n.

ex-act',] egz-akt'; ē ēgz-ăct', v. I. t. 1. To compel the yielding, payment, or surrender of; extort; enforce; hence, to demand as a right; insist upon as a right; require peremptorily; as, to exact a ransom; to exact obedience.

It is the glory of etching that it never exacts completion.

HAMERTON Etching and Etchers pt. i, ch. 9, p. 40. [a. 1876.]

2. Law. To summon to court by proclamation (a person who has failed to appear), on pain of outlawry. See EXIGENT, n. 3†. To claim; call for; demand.

II. i. To make authoritative or exigent demands. [< OF. exacter, < LL. exacto, < L. exactus; see EXACT, a.] ex-act', a. 1. Perfectly conformed to a standard; nicely adjusted; strictly accurate or correct; precise; as, an exact measure; an exact length; the exact sum; an exact fit. 2. Accurately or precisely conceived or expressed; characterized by definite knowledge or principles; strictly determined; definite; as, exact thinking. 3. Rigorous in attention; strictly observant of accuracy or rule; methodical; particular; as, an exact man of business; an exact manager.

Syn.: archetype, exemplar, exemplar, exemplification, ideal, model, pattern, precedent, prototype, sample, specimen, standard, type, warning. From its original sense of sample or specimen (L. exemplum) derives the seemingly contradictory meanings, on the one hand of a pattern or model, and on the other hand of a warning— a sample or specimen of what is to be followed, or what is to be abhorred. As example, however, may be more than a sample or specimen of any class: it may be the very archetype or prototype to which the whole class must conform, as when Christ is spoken of as being the perfect leaving an example for his disciples. Example comes nearer to the possible freedom of the model than to the necessary exactness of the pattern; when we can do a thing given case, exactly imitate the best example, but only adapt its teachings to altered circumstances. In its application to a person or thing, exemplar can scarcely be distinguished from example; but example is most frequently used for an act, or course of action, for which exemplar is not used; as, one sets a good (or a bad) example. An exemplification is an illustrative working out in action of a principle or law, without any reference to its being copied or repeated; an example guides, an exemplification illustrates or explains. Ensample is the same as example, but is now generally confined to Scriptural or theological language. See CASE; MODEL.— ex-am′ple-less, a. Without example; unprecedented. ex-am′plest.— ex-am′ple-ship, n. The condition of offering an example.

ex-cir'cle, 1 ek-sŭr'kl; 2 ĕk-cĕr'cl, n. An escribed circle or its radius.

ex-cise', 1 ek-saiz'; 2 ĕk-cīz', vt. [EX-CISED'; EX-CIS'ING.] To cut out or off; as, to excise the tonsils. [< L. excisus, pp. of excido, < ex, out, + cædo, cut.]

ex-cise', vt. [EX-CISED'; EX-CIS'ING.] 1. To levy an excise tax upon; impose a duty on; as, to excise malt liquors. 2. [Prov. Eng.] To compensate.— ex-cis'a-bl(e, a. Subject to excise duty; dutiable.

ex-cise', n. 1. A charge levied upon commodities or goods of domestic production. What is known as an excise is almost similar to the excise was on occasions levied in very early times in England, the ordinance of the Long Parliament in 1643, in imposing an excise on liquors, first established this method as a recognized source of augmenting the treasury. The tax on commodities alone was at the outset known as excise, but in time taxes imposed on manufacturers of, and dealers in, excisable articles, as well as those levied on certain trades, sports, etc., came to be so designated. Under the present system in Great Britain the term is also applied to those duties formerly known as assessed taxes, which were assessed on persons in accordance with the number of their horses, carriages, servants, etc. In the United States the taxation corresponding to the excise in Great Britain is known as the internal revenue tax.

Taxes on commodities are either on production within the country, or on importation into it, or on conveyance or sale within it, and are classed respectively as excise, customs, or tolls and transit duties.

S.), a local board of public officers, usually appointed by a mayor, having authority to grant liquor licenses, or hear complaints against those who violate the liquor laws.

ex-cise'man, [ɛk-saiz'mən; 2 ɛk-sig'man, n. [-MEN, pl.] [Gk. Brit.] An officer of the excise who collects duties and guards against violation of the excise law.— ex-cise'man-ship, n. The office of an excisaman.

ex-ci'sion, [ɛk-sig'ʃən; 2 ɛk-zizh'ən, n. 1. Surg. The act of excising; removal of a part, as by cutting out, off, or away; pruning; lopping.

It is a question, not of excision from the gospels, but of tearing them into shreds. GLADSTONE Robert Elsmere and the Battle of Belief p. 12. BVRD.]

2. Figuratively, a cutting off or out; doing away with; abscission; extirpation. 3. [Rare.] Excommunication; exclusion. [< L. excisio(n-), < excisus; see EXCISE², v.] ex-ci'sor, n. [Rare.] 1. An excisaman. 2. One who cuts off or circumcises.

ex-cit'a-bil'i-ty, [ɛk-sait'ə-bil'i-ti; 2 ɛk-zit'ə-bil'i-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tiz, pl.] 1. The quality of being excitable; susceptibility to excitement; as, a person of great excitability. 2. Physiology. The power of responding to excitation or stimulus; sensitiveness to irritation.— electric excitability, the property that a nerve has of being stimulated, or a muscle of being contracted, by an electric current; called faradic when the current is intermittent, galvanic when it is continuous.

ex-cit'a-ble, [1 ɛk-sait'ə-bl; 2 ɛk-zit'ə-bl, a. That can be excited.

ex-cit'a-bil, [be easily excited; unusually susceptible to stimuli; nervously high-strung.— ex-cit'a-bil(e-)ness, n. SYN. 2, SQUARDENT; IMPETUOUS.— ex-cit'a-bil(e-)ness, n. ex-cit'an-cy, n. [Rare.] A state of excitement; the act of exciting.

ex-cit'ant, [1 ɛk-sait'ənt; 2 ɛk-zit'ənt, a. Adapted to excite; specif., having the property of stimulating the action of any organ or function, especially of the nervous system. [< L. excitans(t-), ppr. of excito; see EXCITE.]

ex-cit'ant, n. 1. That which tends to excite or stimulate, as a remedy. 2. Elec. The exciting solution in a battery.

ex'cit-a'tion, [1 ɛk'sai-tē'ʃən; 2 ɛk'zi-tē'ʃən, n. 1. The act of exciting or stimulating. 2. The state of being excited; intensified emotion or action; excitement. 3. Psychophysics. The act of arousing, or the state of being aroused, by application of any form of stimulus to an organism; as, the electrical, mechanical, or chemical excitation of the nerves or their end-organs. 4. Rhet. Invention. The stimulation of the feelings either by pathetic appeal, admiration or (2) by ridicule, etc. 5. Elec. Electrical energization; production of a magnetic field in a dynamo or other electric machine. [< LL. excitatio(n-), < L. excito; see EXCITE.] — law of polar excitation, a law enunciated by the German physicists Pflüger, that while a given length of nerve is irritated by increase of catelectrotonus and decrease of anelectrotonus, there is no similar effect when the conditions are reversed.

ex-cit'a-tive, [1 ɛk-sait'ə-tiv; 2 ɛk-zit'ə-tiv, a. Of an exciting nature, or tending to excite; as, excitative suggestions.

ex'cit-a'tor, [1 ɛk'sai-tē'tər or -ter; 2 ɛk'zi-tā'tor, n. Elec. A discharger, as of a Leyden jar, so contrived as to protect the manipulator from shock.

ex-cit'a-to-ry, [1 ɛk-sait'ə-tō-ri; 2 ɛk-zit'ə-tō-ry, a. Of an exciting character; excitative; as, an excitatory influence.

ex-cite', [1 ɛk-sait'; 2 ɛk-zit', vt. [EX-CIT'ED; EX-CIT'ING.] 1. To produce agitation of feeling in; rouse; as, the crime has excited the community greatly. 2. To bring into activity; arouse; call forth; stimulate, as the emotions or desires, or as some physiological function or organ; as, his behavior excited jealousy; calomel excites the secretion of bile. 3. To stir up; bring about, as by stimulating; as, the decision may excite a riot. 4. Elec. To energize; to cause a current to flow through a coil or circuit so as to produce electro-magnetic induction and consequent operation; as, to excite the field. A dynamo may be excited by a portion of the current it produces or from a separate source of electrical energy. SYN. DYNAMO. 5. [Rare.] To instigate; incite.

Glory, the reward That sole excites to high attempts.

MILTON Paradise Lost bk. iii, l. 56.

ex-cite'ment, [1 ɛk-sait'mənt or -ment; 2 ɛk-zit'mənt, n. 1. The act of exciting; a stirring up; stimulation; excitation. 2. The state of being excited, agitated, or aroused; disturbance; as, a great excitement in the town. 3. That which excites, in any sense; as, exciting event or cause; as, we have had few excitements. 4. Pathol. A stimulated or abnormal condition of any bodily function, as the heart's action, nervous force, etc.

Man under cerebral excitement is not easily stunned, and know no pain. CHARLES READE Hard Cash ch. 37, p. 310. [c. & w.]

ex-cit'er, [1 ɛk-sait'ər; 2 ɛk-zit'ər, n. 1. One who or that which excites, stimulates, or rouses; as, an exciter of the people. 2. Elec. (1) The source of electrical energy which supplies the magnetizing current for the field-magnets of a dynamo. (2) A machine which generates electric waves of definite length by means of sparks. (3) A device which supplies the initial charge to the plates of an electrostatic generator.— belted exciter (Elec.), an exciter which is propelled by means of a belt.— compensating e. (Elec.), an exciter for an alternator which regulates the voltage by compensating for the reactive drop as well as the resistance drop.— Hertzian e. (Elec.), an exciter for producing electromagnetic oscillations or Hertzian waves.

ex-cit'ing, [1 ɛk-sait'iŋ; 2 ɛk-zit'ing, pa. Of a nature to excite or cause excitement; stirring; lively; rousing; as, an exciting speech; an exciting scene. ex-cit'or-y†.

It may be said in excuse, that this vanity of distinction was also the exciting motive of his actions.

ex-cit'ive, [1 ɛk-sait'iv; 2 ɛk-zit'iv, a. Exciting; excitative; as, excitive suggestions.

ex-cit'o-mo'tor, [1 ɛk-sait'ō-mō'tər; 2 ɛk-zit'ō-mō'tor, n. Physiol. Stimulated or reflex action.— ex-cit'o-mo'tory, a. 1. Exciting motion, but without sensation or volition, as, the excitomotory function. 2. Of or pertaining to the exciter and motor nerves: a term applied by Dr. Marshall Hall to a region of the spinal cord with its afferent and efferent nerves, by which a simple reflex act is performed.

ex-cit'o-mu'tor-i-al, [1 ɛk-sait'ō-mū'tōr-i-əl; 2 ɛk-zit'ō-mū'tor-i-al, a. Exciting nutrition by reflex action.

ex-cit'or, [1 ɛk-sait'ər or -tor; 2 ɛk-zit'or, n. Physiol. 1. An afferent nerve conducting a nervous discharge from the spinal column to the higher centers. 2. An electrode used to excite a nerve.

ex-cl'to-se-cre'tory, a. Exciting secretion by reflex action.

excl., exclam., abbr. Exclamation; exclamatory.

ex-claim', [1 ɛks-klām'; 2 ɛks-clām', v. I. t. To cry out abruptly or with passion; as, he exclaimed, "scoundrel!" II. i. To call out loudly or abruptly; say something vehemently; as, he exclaimed against interference. [< F. exclamer, < L. exclamo, < ex, out, + clamo, cry.]

SYN.: call, cry out, ejaculate. In exclaiming, the utterance may not be strikingly, or somewhat, above the ordinary tone and pitch; we may exclaim by mere interjections, or by connected words. To ejaculate is to throw out brief, disconnected, but coherent utterances of joy, regret, and especially of appeal, petition, prayer; the use of such devotional utterances has received the special name of "ejaculatory prayer." To cry out is to give forth a louder and more excited utterance than in exclaiming; one cries out often with sudden joy as well as sorrow; if he cries out, it is oftener in grief or agony. One may exclaim, cry out, or ejaculate with no thought of other presence; to exclaim or cry out is to attract another's attention. See CALL.— ex-claim', n. [Archaic.] Outcry; clamor.— ex-claim'er, n. One who exclaims, or speaks out vehemently; as, an exclaimer against society.

ex-cla'ma-ble, [1 ɛks-klē'mə-bl; 2 ɛks-clā'mə-bl, a. Exclamation.

ex-clam'a-to-ry, [1 ɛks-klam'ə-tō-ri; 2 ɛks-clām'ə-tō-ry, a. 1. Of the nature of, containing, or expressing exclamation; as, an exclamatory sentence. 2. Given to the use of exclamation; as, an exclamatory reader. [< L. exclamatus, pp. of exclamo; see EXCLAIM.] ex-clam'a-tive(-li),— ex-clam'a-tive(-ly)s, ex-clam'a-to-ri-ly, adv. — ex-clam'a-to-ri-ness, n.

ex-clave, [1 ɛks'klēv; 2 ɛks'clēv, n. 1. A minor part of a country disjoined from the main part and lying within an alien territory. Compare ENCLAVE. 2. A portion of an organ, as the pancreas or the spleen, detached from the main body or part. [< EX- + clave (in ENCLAVE).]

ex-clude', [1 ɛks-klūd'; 2 ɛks-clud', vt. [EX-CLUD'ED; EX-CLUD'ING.] 1. To shut out purposely or forcibly; keep out; debar. 2. To reject as exceptional, inappropriate, illegal, or the like; regard as not proper to be received or accepted; as, to exclude unfounded claims.

There are some kinds of evidence which the law excludes, or disposes not to hear, on the general public policy.

GREENLEAF Evidence vol. i, pt. ii, ch. 13, p. 309. [L. n. & co. 1867.]

3. To extrude or eject; as, to exclude a larva or young. [< L. excludo, < ex, out, + claudo, shut.] — law of excluded middle, the law that of any two contradictories one must be true and the other false, the affirming of one necessarily denying the other; formulated — A either is or is not; A either is or is not-A; one but not both must obtain.

— ex-clud'er, n. A person or thing that excludes; specif., in beekeeping, a perforated plate for separating certain bees in the hive, as queens from workers, drones from excluder, excluder-zinc, etc.— ex-clud'ing-ly, adv.

ex-clu'sion, [1 ɛks-klū'ʒən; 2 ɛks-cly'zhon, n. 1. The act of excluding, or the state of being excluded; nonadmission; debarment; rejection; exception. 2. Logic. That relation of two classes of notions in which the one lies entirely without the other, embracing (1) coordination, where they both lie within a third class, and (2) non-coordination, where they do not so lie. 3. The act of extruding or ejecting; as from an egg or from the womb. 4. The thing extruded; excretion. [< L. exclusio(n-), < exclusus; see EXCLUSIVE.] — Exclusion Bill (Eng. Hist.), a measure introduced by Parliament to exclude the Duke of York from the throne in case he should outlive his brother Charles II. It was introduced in and passed by the Commons several times (1679, 1680, and 1681), but on each occasion was rejected by the House of Lords.— exclusion of the pupil, a circular or annular synechia. See SYNECHIA.— method of e., a method of argument that successively excludes every possible cause or reason — then, and which is then taken to be the correct one.— ex-clu'sion-a-ry, a. [Rare.] Exclusive.— ex-clu'sion-ism, n. The principles or practises of an exclusionist.— ex-clu'sion-ist, n. One who practises the principle of exclusion.— ex-clu'sion-ist, a.

ex-clu'sive,] 1 ɛks-klū'siv; 2 ɛks-cly'siv, a. Of a nature to exclude; tending to exclude; shutting out or debarring from participation; specif., (1) Disposed to limit social relations; as, an exclusive social circle. (2) Shutting out from limits fixed by law; sole by right; existing alone; as, exclusive jurisdiction. (3) Leaving out of count; non-inclusive; as, to pay in full, exclusive of interest.

I am no friend to the doctrine of precedents exclusive of right.

JUNIUS Letters vol. i, pref., p. 24. [L. n. 1851.]

(4) Logic. Asserting the existence in one of one thing or class and false of all others; as, an exclusive proposition.

Exclusive propositions contain some words such as only, alone, none but, which limits the predicate to the subject.

W. S. JEVONS Lessons in Logic lesson viii, p. 68. [MACM. 1878.]

ex'com-mu'ni-cate. I. a. Excommunicated. II. n. An excommunicated person. ex'com-mu'ni-cant† [Rare].

ex'com-mu'ni-ca'tion, [1 ɛks'kə-miū'ni-kē'ʃən; 2 ɛks'cə-mū'ni-cā'shon, n. The act of excommunicating, or the state of having been excommunicated.

This ecclesiastical penalty, as common to Christendom, is based on Matt. xvi, 19, and xviii, 17, and on 1 Cor. v. In the Roman Catholic Church it was formerly divided into the minor and major excommunications. The former excluded from the sacraments only; the latter is a complete casting off of the offender from all the privileges attached to church-membership, and from all recognition by the faithful. By formal ratification of the Holy Office of Jan. 6, 1884, it was decided that minor excommunication no longer existed. Cath. Encyc. v. 5, p. 680. ex-co'ri-a'tion, [2 ɛks-kō'ri-ē'ʃən; 2 ɛks-cō'ri-ā'shon, n. The act or result of excoriating, or the state of being excoriated; an abrasion. 2†. Stripping of property; robbery.

ex-cor'ti-cate, [1 ɛks-kōr'ti-kēt; 2 ɛks-cōr'ti-cāt, vt. [-CAT'ED; -CAT'ING.] To peel off the bark or rind of, as a tree. [< LL. excorticatus, pp. of excortico, < L. ex, off, + cortex (cortic-), bark.] — ex-cor'ti-ca'tion, n.

ex, cp., ex., abbr. Astron (which) culm(s).

ex'cre-ment', [1 ɛks'kri-ment; 2 ɛks'cre-mėnt, n. Any refuse matter discharged from an animal body; specif., the feces. Excrement, composed almost entirely of matter that taken up by the blood, is distinguished from excretion. [< F. excrément, < L. excrementum, < excerno; see EXCRETE, v.] — ex'cre-men'tal, a.

ex'cre-men'ti-tial, [1 ɛks'kri-men'ti-ʃəl; 2 ɛks'cre-mėn'ti-shal, a. Of the nature of excrement, or mixed with excrement.— ex'cre-men'ta-ry†; ex'cre-men-til'i-al; ex'cre-men-ti'tious.

— ex'cre-men'tiv(e-)ness, n. Connected with or producing excrement or feces.— ex'cre-ment-ize, vt. To discharge excrement.— ex-cre-men'tous†, a. Same as EXCREMENTAL.

ex'cre-ment-i-t, n. An appendage; an excrescence.— ex'cre-men-ti'tious†, a. Of or pertaining to an excrescence.

ex-cres'cence, [1 ɛks-kres'əns; 2 ɛks-cres'cens, n. An unnatural or disfiguring outgrowth, as a wart on the human body or a nutgall on the oak; any unnatural addition, outgrowth, or development. 2. [Rare.] A natural outgrowth; as, excrescences from the scalp. 3. Philol. The development of excrescent sounds. 4†. A wild outbreak, as of passion. [< L. excrescentia, neut. pl. of excrescen(t-)s, ppr. of excresco, < ex, + cresco, grow.] — ex-cres'cen-cy, n.

ex-cres'cent,] 1 ɛks-kres'ənt; 2 ɛks-cres'ėnt, a. Of the nature of or pertaining to an outgrowth or excrescence; especially, useless as a growth or addition; superfluous; as, an excrescent part. — excrescent consonant, [< L. excrescen(t-)s; see EXCRESCENCE.] ex'cres-cen'tial;

— excrescent letter, a letter that has been added to a root, as b in thumb, or l in could.

ex'cre'ta, [1 ɛks'kri-tə; 2 ɛks-cri'ta, n. pl. 1. All useless matter eliminated from the bodily system, especially that which has entered into the constitution of the body and is removed in urine or sweat; in the limited sense not including the feces. 2. Physiol. Substances or worthless matter generated in a plant body by destructive metabolism. [L., neut. pl. of excretus; see EXCRETE, v.] — ex-cre'tal, a. Of or relating to the excreta.

ex-cre'te',] 1 ɛks-krīt'; 2 ɛks-crī't', n. [EX-CRET'ED; EX-CRET'ING.] To throw off (waste matter) by normal discharge from any organism. [< L. excretus, pp. of excerno, < ex, out, + cerno, separate.] — ex-cret'or, n. One who excretes; said also of plants.— ex'cre-tin, n. Chem. A yellow crystalline compound ($C_{21}H_{24}O$) contained in human feces, from which it is extracted by exhaustion with alcohol. — ex'cre-tine.

ex'cre'te,] ɛks'krīt; 2 ɛks'crēt, n. That which has been excreted; any waste matter discharged from the system.

ex-cre'tion,] ɛks-krī'shən; 2 ɛks-crē'shon, n. 1. The act of excreting; the getting rid of waste matter.

Lastly, there are the subsidiary functions . . . those, namely, of excretion and exhalation.

SPENCER Biology vol. i, pt. ii, ch. 3, p. 155. [A. 1872.]

2. Matter excreted, particularly sweat, urine (including the carbon dioxid eliminated in it), and the juices exuded from certain plants. Excretions are, in a sense, secretions, but, while the former are of the matter contributes toward a useful end, such is not the case with the former. As examples of excretions the saccharine exudation secreted by flowers, and the incrustations of organic salts, are typical; the formation of bark and other nonelemental tissue in plants results from the difficulty which they have in throwing off excretions.— ex-cre'tion-a-ry, a. [Rare.] Relating to excretion.

ex'cre-ti'tious,] ɛks'kri-tish'əs; 2 ɛks'cre-tish'as, a. [Rare.] 1. Relating to excrement. 2. Relating to excrescence; superfluous.

ex-cre'tive, } 1 eks-krē'tiv; 2 ĕks-crē'tiv (xiii), a. Having the function or power to excrete.

ex-ec'u-tive, } 1 egz-ek'yu-tiv; 2 ĕgz-ĕc'yu-tiv, a. Having the function or power of executing or performing; also, connected with or pertaining to that function; carrying into effect; administrative, as distinguished from legislative and judicial; as, an executive department of the government. Legislative is applied to the body, or organ of government, which, after due deliberation, enacts the laws; judicial, to that which construes the laws and makes them applicable to specific cases; executive, to the person, or body of persons, who or which makes the laws effective, or makes their enactments operative. Montesquieu, it is said, was the first to advocate the distribution of the powers of government among three distinct authorities; he also advocated the Independence of the three distinct authorities, but this has not always been practicable. Under the Constitution of the United States the chief executive power is vested in the President, while in the States of the Union this power is exercised by the Governor. In Great Britain and Germany, under monarchical governments, the executive power rests with the crown. In France the President promulgates the laws passed by both houses, and insures their execution. In Russia, formerly, a nominally constitutional hereditary monarchy, the whole legislative, judicial, and executive power was actually vested in the emperor. See JUDICIARY; LEGISLATURE. [< L. executus; see EXECUTE.]—executive act (Psychol.), the voluntary act which follows decision or choice, and which sets into action the means adapted to execute the decision or the chosen plan, as the deed of will which accomplishes the actual getting up when one has decided to get up. ex-hale', 1 eks-lor egz-lēl'; 2 ĕks-lor ĕgz-lāl', v. [-HALED; -HAL'ING.] I. t. 1. To breathe forth; send forth; cause to be breathed forth; draw forth as vapor; cause to evaporate; as, heat exhales the earth's moisture. 2†. To draw, as blood from a wound.

II. i. To come forth or rise in vapor; be given off as an effluvium or emanation; pass off.

A breath of hearty and noble feeling lives in and exhales from the whole of his great work [Sidney's Arcadia], like the fragrance from a garden of flowers. CHAIR Eng. Lit. and Lang., Earlier Elizabethan Prose in vol. i, p. 474. [S. & CO. 1864.]

ex-ha'late†. — ex-ha'la-bl(ĕ), a. — ex-ha'lant. I. a. Having the property of exhaling. II. n. Anything exhaled or which exhales. ex-ha'lent; ex-ha'la-to-ry, n. [Rare.] A passage or vent for exhaling gas.
ex-han'ri-ent, 1 eks-hā'ri-ənt; 2 ĕks-hą'rĭ-ĕnt, a. A medicine that diminishes action or sensation secondarily. [< L. ex, out, + haurio, draw out, exhaust.]
ex-haust', 1 egz-ôst'; 2 ĕgz-ăst' (XIII), v. I. t. 1. To draw off entirely, as a liquid; remove the whole of by or as by drawing; hence, to expend or remove entirely as by draining or other gradual process; as, to exhaust the water of a lake; to exhaust one's patience or one's means. 2. To empty by draining off the contents; as, to exhaust a cask of liquor. 3. To reduce greatly the strength or quantity of, or to deprive entirely of resources or characteristic properties; weaken; as, to exhaust one by labor; to exhaust a soil. 4. To examine or discuss with thoroughness; go carefully over the full ground of; treat exhaustively; as, to exhaust a subject.

Each change of many-colour'd life he drew,
Exhausted worlds, and then imagined new.
JOHNSON Prol., Drury Lane Theatre l. 4.

5. Pharm. To remove the essential principles of, as of a herb, by means of a solvent, and leave an inert remainder. Compare EXTRACT. 6. Mech. To discharge (steam or other motive fluid) from a cylinder, after the fluid has done mechanical work. †7. To draw forth, as tears. II. i. To discharge; escape; pass out; as, the steam exhausts through the opening. [< LL. exhausto, < L. exhaustus, pp. of exhaurio, < ex, out, + haurio, draw.]

SYN.: see ABSORB; TIRE.—ex-haust'ĭ, a. Drained out or exhausted; used up; spent.—ex-haust'er, n. One who or that which exhausts; specif., in gas-making, an apparatus for preventing back-pressure on the retorts, usually an exhaust-fan.—ex-haust'ĭ-bĭl'ĭ-ty, n.—ex-haust'ĭ-bl(ĕ), a.—ex-haust'ĭng, pa. Causing or tending to cause exhaustion.

ex-haust', n. 1. Mech. (1) The motive fluid discharged or escaping from the cylinder of any motive engine after doing mechanical work. (2) The period of discharge of a motive fluid after it has done work. (3) The time or point in the stroke or rotation at which such discharge begins. (4) The formation of a partial vacuum; specif., the device used in flour-mills to conduct dust-particles away by means of such air-currents. (5) The outlet ports which lead from the engine-cylinder. (6) The escape of the motive fluid from the cylinder. 2. Foul air escaping from an apartment by a special register or pipe. 3. Emission. 4. The process of creating a vacuum. 5. The intensity of a vacuum; as, an exhaust of .05 millimeter (of mercury).—port, man's'e cham'ber, n. A chamber in a locomotive smoke-box to equalize the draft of the upper and lower tubes.—e.-cover, n. An exhaust-lap.—e.-draft, n. An artificial draft produced by mechanical suction, as by a fan. e.-draught, †.—e.-edges, n. Mech. The edges of a slide-valve that regulate the exhaust.—e.-fan, n. A fan for creating a draft by forming a partial vacuum; exhausted room. e.-feature, n. e.-gas, n. The products of combustion produced in the cylinder of an internal-combustion engine.—e.-head, n. A device for deadening the noise of exhaust-steam.—e.-jacket, n. A chamber in an engine through which the exhaust-products from the cylinder are conducted in order to utilize the heat they contain.—e.-lap, n. Mech. See LAP.—e.-lead, n. See LEAD.—e.-line, n. In an indicator-diagram, the nearly horizontal line representing the pressures on the working side of the piston during exhaust.—e.-method, n. A method used in psychology for determining the fundamental principles of olfactory sensation, by exhausting the sense of smell; for a specific odor, by prolonged smelling.—e.-mill, n. A mill from which dust or moisture is removed by means of an exhaust-draft.—e.-nozzle, n. A blast-nozzle, or orifice for discharging the exhaust-steam of an engine, as into the uptake to create a draft.—e.-opener, n. A machine for removing cotton, etc., from the bale, by means of suction.—e.-pipe, n. The pipe that conveys the exhaust of a steam-engine to the condenser or the atmosphere.—e.-port, n. The port of escape for exhaust-steam.—e. price (Finance), the market value of a stock at which, his margin exhausted, a trader has no equity.—e.-purifier, n. An exhaust-draft apparatus used in purifying the light grains or to clean middlings.—e.-silencer, n. A device attached to an internal-combustion engine to silence or diminish the sound produced by the escaping gases; a muffler.—e.-steam, n. Steam that is discharged after its work is done.—e.-time, n. The average time necessary for the exhaustion of the olfactory organ for the perception of a given odor. See EXHAUSTION METHOD.—e.-valve, n. 1. A valve that controls the passage of motive fluid from the cylinder of an engine. 2. A valve for releasing the exhaust of an engine.—point of e., the point in an engine cycle at which the expanded steam or gases are discharged from the cylinder. In theory, it occurs when the crank and piston are at the dead center.

ex-haus'tion, n. [< LL. exhaustio; < L. exhaustus, pp.] 1. The act or process of exhausting, or the state of being exhausted; an exhausted, emptied, or weakened condition; deprivation of strength or energy.

The one great fundamental disease of all Americans is simply nervous exhaustion. T. W. HIGGINSON Outdoor Papers, Gymnastics p. 103. [ʀ. ᴀ ᴘ. 1863.]

2. Physics. (1) The removal of air from a receiver. (2) The extent to which the removal is effected, as indicated by the diminished elasticity of the air that remains. (3) That state of a voltaic cell in which, its active electrolyte being decomposed, it is practically inoperative, or will in fact furnish no current. 3. Psychophysics & Physiol. The condition of extreme fatigue in which the organism ceases to respond to stimulation. 4. The removal of the soluble principles of drugs, usually by percolation; also, the resulting state of the substance. 5. Logic. A method of proof in which, one after another, all the possible alternatives in a case except one are shown to be false or impossible, and the remaining alternative is then asserted to be true. 6. Geom. An application of the method of limits to prove that two areas or volumes differ by less than any assignable quantity. [< L. exhaustus: see EXHAUST, a.]—ex-haus'tion-meth'od, n. Psychophysics. A method of analyzing olfactory sensations by exhausting the sense of smell for one odor, and assuming that it remains so for another odor, the latter belonging to a fundamentally different group.—e.-time, n. The time required for exhaustion of the capacity of the organ for a given odor.—method of e. (Geom.), same as EXHAUSTION, 6.—nervous e., same as NEURASTHENIA.

ex-haus'tĭ-ve(ĕs), a. [< ML. exhaustivus; < L. exhaustus, pp.] Exhausting or tending to exhaust; covering all points, facts, arguments, etc., involved; thorough and complete in execution.

Flinders . . . was then ordered to examine the coast to the Gulf of Carpentaria, and make an exhaustive survey of Torres Strait.

It describes the giving of the divine law and establishment of Jehovah's dwelling-place in the tabernacle, and opens with an account of the exodus of Israel from Egypt. See PENTATEUCH. ex'odet [Rare]; ex'o-dyt. Syn.: departure, exile, exit. Exodus is misused as a general synonym for departure; properly used in English especially of a somewhat multitudinous going out or departure from a country or region, like that of the Israelites from Egypt. Not "My exodus was hasty," but "My departure," if away from a place or point; "My exit," if out of a place, as a room; as, "His departure (not exodus) from home was hasty"; "An unseemly fire led to his hasty exit (not exodus) from the house"; "A fire in the theater led to a hasty exodus of the spectators."

ex-of-fic'i-o, 1 eks-o-fish'ĭ-ō; 2 ĕks-ō-fĭsh'ĭ-ō. [L.] By virtue of or because of office or position; as, the mayor is ex officio chairman; he can do this ex officio; officially.—ex'of-fi'cial, a. [Rare.] Proceeding from or by virtue of office.

ex-og'a-my, 1 ek-sog'ə-mĭ; 2 ĕk-sŏg'ə-mĭ, n. 1. The custom or law of certain peoples forbidding any member thereof to marry within his own tribe, clan, or family; marriage outside of one's tribe, clan, or family: opposed to endogamy.

The principle of exogamy—that is, which prohibited marriage within the tribe. J. F. MCLENNAN Studies in Anc. Hist. ch. 3, p. 41. [n. d., 1876.]

2. Biol. The tendency to keep from pairing, as in the case of slightly varying gametes. [< EXO- + Gr. gamos, marriage.]—ex-og'a-mous, a. Of or pertaining to exogamy; characterized by exogamy.—ex-og'e-nous, a. Same as EXOGENOUS.

ex'o-gas'tric, 1 eks'ō-gas'trik; 2 ĕks'ō-găs'trĭc, a. With the ventral sinus toward the external side of the shell, as in the lamellibranchs.—ex'o-gas'tri-ca, n. pl. Conchol. Same as Pathol. Inflammation of the external or peritoneal coat of the stomach; peritgastritis.

ex'o-gas'tro-la, 1 eks'ō-gas'trō-lə; 2 ĕks'ō-găs'trō-lə, n. A rudimental variety of gastrula, formed by a swelling out of the vegetative pole of the blastula.

ex'o-gen, 1 eks'ō-jen; 2 ĕks'ō-jĕn, n. Bot. A plant whose Exogen.

1. Vertical section of an exogenous stem. 2. Cross-section. (Letters apply to both figures.) a, wood; b, bark; c, cambium layer; h, heart-wood or duramen, representing the rings of growth of three successive years; l, 2d-y. sapwood or alburnum; s, cambium layer; b, bark.

stem consists of bark, wood, and pith, which, when continuing from year to year, increases in size by successive concentric additions between the bark and outside the previous growth; a dicotyledon in a wide sense; an "outside grower": opposed to endogen. Except in the gymnosperms (cone-bearing trees, etc.), it has two cotyledons or seed-leaves, netted-veined leaves, and the parts of the flowers in fours or fives. [< EXO- + -GEN.]

The zones of wood are separated by botanists into two grand divisions, known as exogens, or outside growers, and endogens, or inside growers.

A. S. PURLES Botanical Forestry ch. 3, p. 10. lo. x. co. 1884.]

—Ex-og'e-næ, n. pl. The exogens as a class.

ex'o-ge-ne'ic, 1 eks'ō-jĭ-nē'ĭk; 2 ĕks'ō-jē-nē'ĭc, a. 1. Originating from or due to external causes; as, exogenetic disease. 2. Exogenous. ex'o-gen'ic.

ex-og'e-nite, 1 eks-oj'ĭ-nīt; 2 ĕks-ŏj'ē-nīt, n. Geol. A secondary mineral deposit, foreign to its containing rock-formation and of later origin, such as the crystal incrustation of the cavity of a geode: contrasted with idiogenite.

ex-og'e-nous, 1 eks-oj'ĭ-nus; 2 ĕks-ŏj'ē-nŭs, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or like an exogen or the exogens; growing by increasing by external additions. 2. Originating or growing from without or on the outside of something. 3. Geol. (1) Of external sea-border origin: said of the stratigraphical growth of continents.

It began to be observed on the Atlantic side in the Cretaceous era. J. D. DANA in Bul. Geol. Soc. Am. vol. i, p. 48. [PUB. BY SOC.]

(2) Intrusive or exotic: said of rocks.—exogenous aneurism (Med.), an aneurism arising from external causes, as from an injury.—ex-og'e-nously, adv.

ex-og'e-ny, n. Same as EXOGAMY.

ex'o-gna'thi-on, n. [-nā-, pl.] Anat. The main body of the upper incisive or premaxillary bone, exclusive of the premaxillary portion. See MESOGNATHION and ENDOGNATHION, and illus. under INTERMAXILLARY BONE.—ex-og'na-thite, n.

The outside portion of a premaxillary bone of a mammal's jaw; the incisive or premaxillary portion of a mammal's maxilliped.—Ex'o-go'ni-um, n. Bot. A genus of mostly tropical American plants of the family Convolvulaceæ. They are characterized by the protecting of the stamens from the corolla-tube and by the buttonwithe stigmas. Several of the species are useful in medicine as having cathartic properties. E. purga yields the jalap of pharmacy.

ex-or'ge-nous, a. Biol. Having the style projecting beyond the corolla.—Ex'o-gy'ra, n. Paleon. A genus of Jurassic and Cretaceous shells akin to the true oysters.—ex'o-hys'tero-pex'y, n. A surgical operation for the fixation of the uterus by attaching it to the fascia of the anterior wall of the abdomen exterior to the peritoneal cavity.—ex'o-lem'ma, n. Histol. A delicate coating enveloping the endolemma of a spermatozoon.

ex'o-lete, a. Obsolete; worn; stale; insipid.

ex'o-lu'tion, n. Publishing: syncope.

ex'o-me-tri'tis, 1 eks'ō-mē-trī'tis or -trĭ'tis; 2 ĕks'ō-mē-trī'tis or -trĭ'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the outer coat of the womb: perimetritis.

ex-o'mi-on, 1 eks-ō'mi-on; 2 ĕks-ō'mĭ-ŏn, n. Same as EXOMION.

ex-o'mis, 1 eks-ō'mis; 2 ĕks-ō'mĭs, n. [Gr.] Gr. Antiq. A vest or short tunic, sleeveless, or with only one sleeve: the usual dress of the poorer classes and slaves.

ex'o-mol'o-ge'sis†, n. A full or general confession.

ex'o-mor'phic, 1 eks'ō-môr'fik; 2 ĕks'ō-môr'fĭc, a. Geol. Belonging to or characterizing the effects produced on contiguous rocks by the intrusion or extrusion of igneous rock: contrasted with endomorphic. [< Gr. exō, without, + morphē, form.]—ex'o-mor'phism, n.

exom'pha-los, 1 egz-om'fə-los; 2 ĕgz-ŏm'fə-lŏs, n. [Gr.] Umbilical hernia, or a person affected with it. ex-om'phalus†, —ex-om'pha-lous, a.

ex'on, 1 eks'on; 2 ĕks'ŏn, n. [Gr. Brit.] Any one of three certain officers of the six in command of the yeomen of the royal guard, especially the one residing at the court as acting commander; an exempt. [< F. exonc, < L. ex, from, + F. oste, ouste.]—ex'on-ship, n.

ex'o-nar'thex, 1 eks'ō-när'thĕks, 2 ĕks'ō-när'thĕks, n. [Gr.] Arch. An outer narthex or porch, as distinguished from the esonarthex or arcaded lobby of an Oriental church.

ex-on'er-ate, 1 egz-on'ər-āt; 2 ĕgz-ŏn'ĕr-āt, vt. [-AT-ED; -AT-ING.] 1. To relieve or vindicate from accusation, imputation, or blame; acquit; exculpate; as, to exonerate one who has been suspected of crime.

My father is exonerated — . . . unless this is a forgery. DAILY HARTFORD Youth's Bal Bloom an. iv, p. 137. [n. n. a. co. 1882.]

2. To relieve, free, or discharge from a responsibility, liability, duty, or the like; as, to exonerate a debtor; to exonerate oneself from a bail-bond by surrender of the party bailed. 3†. To unload; disburden, especially the bowels. [< L. exoneratus, pp. of exonerare, < ex, from, + onus (oner-), burden.]—ex-on'er-a-ble, a.—ex-on'er-a'tion, n. The act of exonerating, or the state of being exonerated; a release or freedom from a charge, accusation, imputation, obligation, or the like.—ex-on'er-a-tive (-ə-tiv), a. Serving or tending to exonerate or relieve.—ex-on'er-a'tor, n.

ex'on'er-a'te, a. [Rare.] Exonerated; relieved.

ex-on'er-o'tur, 1 egz-on'ər-ō'tur; 2 ĕgz-ŏn'ĕr-ō'tŭr, n. [L.] Law. A judicial order entered on a bail-piece, discharging the bail.

ex'o-neu'ral, a. Situated outside of the nervous system.—ex'o-neu'ral-ly, adv.—ex'o-path'ic, a. Pathol. Of or resulting from causes without the organism. Compare AUTOGENIC. —ex'o-pe-rid'i-um, n. Bot. The outer peridium, when it is possible to distinguish more than one.—ex-oph'a-gy n. A custom or law among certain cannibals permitting them to eat only persons not belonging to their own tribe.—exoph'a-gous, a.—ex'o-phe'ri-a, n. Pathol. A tendency of the visual lines to diverge outward, a restraining influence being exerted to maintain parallelism. [< EXO- + Gr. pherō, bear.]—ex'o-phor'ic, a.

ex'oph-thal'mi-a, 1 eks'of-thal'mi-ə; 2 ĕks'ŏf-thăl'mĭ-ə, n. Pathol. Abnormal protrusion of the eyeball from the orbit, as by reason of a tumor or exostosis behind it. [< Gr. exophthalmos, with prominent eyes, < ex, out, + ophthalmos, eye.] ex'oph-thal'myt.—ex'oph-thal'mic, a. Med. Pertaining to, of the nature of, accompanied by, or affected with exophthalmia.—exophthalmic goiter, a disease characterized by enlargement of the thyroid gland, protrusion of the eyeballs, anemia, and palpitation of the heart; Basedow's disease.—ex'oph-thal'mus, n. 1. A person suffering from exophthalmia. 2. Exophthalmia. ex'oph-thal'most.—ex'o-phyl'lous, a. Bot. Having the plumule naked: a synonym for dicotyledonous. [< EXO- + Gr. phyllon, leaf.] ex-op'thel.—ex'o-plasm, n. Biol. Same as ECTOPLASM.

ex-op'o-dite, 1 eks-op'ō-dit; 2 ĕks-ŏp'ō-dĭt, n. Crust. The outer branch of the shaft or stem (protopodite) of an appendage. [< EXO- + Gr. pous (pod-), foot.] See illus. under PROTOPODITE. ex'o-pod';—ex-op'o-dit'ic, a.

ex-op'ta-ble, a. Worthy of being desired; desirable.

ex-op'ta-ble'ness, n. Earnest desire; longing.

Ex'op-ter'y-go'ta, 1 eks'op-ter'ĭ-gō'tə; 2 ĕks'ŏp-tĕr'ĭ-gō'tə, n. pl. Entom. A superorder of insects with the wings outside the body on the back during development, including the Orthoptera, Odonata, Hemiptera, and Neuroptera. [< Gr. exō, without, + pterugōtos, winged.]—ex'op-ter'y-gote, a. & n.—ex'op-ter'y-got'ic, a.—ex'op-ter'y-go-ism, n.—ex'op-ter'y-gy'o-tous, a.

ex'o-ra-ble, 1 eks'ō-ra-bl; 2 ĕks'ō-ra-bl, a. Capable of being persuaded or moved by entreaty; capable of relenting.

Laws are invariable, and nature instead of being exorable is inexorable. J. WILSON Immortal Life ch. 1, p. 16. lo. n. a. co. 1881.]

—ex'o-ra-bil'i-ty, ex'o-ra-ble-ness†, n.—ex'o-rate, vt. [Rare.] To obtain by entreaty; persuade.—ex'o-ra'tion, n. [Rare.] Entreaty.

ex-or'bi-tance, 1 egz-ôr'bi-tans; 2 ĕgz-ôr'bĭ-tanç, n. Excessiveness in degree or amount; extravagance or enormity; a going or being beyond proper or usual limits; a tendency to be exorbitant. [< LL. exorbitantia, < L. exorbitan(t)s, pp. of exorbito, go out of the track, < ex, out, + orbita, track, < orbis, circle.] ex-or'bi-tan-cy. Syn.: see EXCESS.

ex-or'bi-tant, 1 egz-ôr'bi-tant; 2 ĕgz-ôr'bĭ-tant, a. 1. Going beyond usual and proper limits; unconscionably exacting or enormous; excessive; inordinate; extravagant; as, exorbitant rates.

The exorbitant power of the baron had been gradually reduced. MACAULAY England vol. i, ch. 1, p. 19. lp. s. a. co. 1849.]

2. Deviating; eccentric; erring; anomalous. 3. [Rare.] Law. Out of the realm of the law; illegal. Syn.: see IMMODERATE. Compare synonyms for EXCESS.

—ex-or'bi-tant-ly, adv.

ex-or'bi-tate†, a. Deviated from the usual orbit or prescribed course; exceed usual limits.—ex-or'bi-tal, a. Outside the orbit.—ex-or'bi-ta'tion, n.

ex'or-cise, 1 eks'ôr-sīz; 2 ĕks'ôr-çīz, s. [-CISED; -CIS-ING.] 1. To cast or drive out (an evil spirit) by religious or magical formulas or ceremonies; expel by means of adjuration, incantation, or the like. 2. To deliver or attempt to deliver from the possession or influence of devils, unclean spirits, or the like, by religious or magical agencies or ceremonies; pronounce exorcisms over; as, to exorcise a person or place. 3†. To summon or conjure up, as a demon.

1. t. To use or practise exorcisms; drive out or attempt to drive out devils.

The Council of Laodicea . . . forbids those who have not been ordained to exorcise either in church or in private houses. A. & A. Cath. Dict.

cize‡.— ex'or-cise-ment, n.— ex'or-cis'er, n. 1. One who exorcises. 2. A conjurer.

ex'or-cism, 1 eks'ẽr-sizm; 2 ẽks'ôr-çĭsm, n. 1. The act of exorcising evil spirits; also, a solemn ceremony or formula of adjuration used in such exorcising.

In the Greek and Latin churches such a ceremony and formula are still used, especially at baptisms, to dissever the soul of the candidate from the influence of evil powers.

In the third century . . . exorcism was applied to catechumens coming from paganism, on the assumption that pagan world was the realm of evil spirits, and that those who came into the Church from it must be delivered from the power of evil. New Schaff-Herzog Encyc. of Relig. Knowledge, vol. v., p. 711. [R. A. '10.]

Exorcism was a practice which had long been prevalent among the Jews, and it was often connected with the grossest credulity and the most flagrant imposture.

FARRAR St. Paul vol. ii, bk. ix, ch. 31, p. 24. [E. P. D.]

2. [Archaic.] The act or process of raising the devil or a spirit, or the formula used in doing so. [< LL. exorcismus, < Gr. exorkismos, < exorkizō; see EXORCISE.] ex'or-cist [Rare]. ex'or-cize [Rare]. ex'or-ci-sa'tion†.— ex'or-cis'mal or ex'or-ci'sory, a.

ex'or-cist, 1 eks'ẽr-sist; 2 ẽks'ôr-çĭst, n. 1. One who exorcises, or who practises exorcism. 2. Eccl. One of the minor orders in the Greek and Roman Catholic churches; the second of the four minor orders of the Western Church.

As conditions changed in the Church, the office of exorcist, as an independent office, ceased altogether, and was taken over by clerics in major orders. . . According to the present discipline of the Catholic Church it is only priests who are authorized to use the exorcising power conferred by ordination.

New Schaff-Herzog Encyc. of Relig. Knowledge, vol. v., p. 711. [R. A. '10.]

3. [Archaic.] One who calls up evil spirits. [< LL. exorcista, < Gr. exorkistēs; see EXORCISE.]

— ex'or-cis'tic, a.— ex'or-cis'ti-cal, a.— ly, adv.

ex'or-di-um, 1 eg-zôr'dĭ-ŭm; 2 ẽks-ôr'dĭ-ŭm, n. [-UMS or -A, pl.] [L.] The beginning or introductory part, especially of a discourse or composition, intended to prepare the way for what follows; a prelude: introduction.— ex-or'di-al, a. Of, pertaining to, or like an exordium: introductory; initial.

ex'or-dize, vi. [Rare.] To deliver an exordium.

ex'or-gan'ic, 1 eks'ôr-gan'ĭk; 2 ẽks'ôr-găn'ĭk, a. Not longer organized or organic. [< EX- + ORGANIC.]

ex'o-rhi'za, 1 eks'o-rai'zə; 2 ẽks'o-rī'zə, n. Bot. An exogen or dicotyledon. ex'o-rhi'zal, a.— ex'o-rhi'zous, a.

ex'or-mi-a, 1 eks'ôr-mi-ə; 2 ẽks-ôr'mi-ə, n. Papular eruption.

ex'or-tive, a. Of or pertaining to the east or the rising of the heavenly bodies: rising.

ex'o-sce'ne, 1 eks'o-sēçn'; 2 ẽks'o-sēn'ē, n. 1. Considering or considered superficially; seeing or seen from the outside. 2. Math. Pertaining to a method which assumes that the coefficients of a problem are bounds, without taking into account their inner constitution. [< EXO- + GR. skēnē, view.] — ex'o-scop'ic-al-ly, adv.

ex'o-sep'sis, 1 eks'o-sep'sĭs; 2 ẽks'o-sēp'sĭs, n. An infection from a virus generated outside an organism, in contradistinction to endosepsis.

ex'o-sep'tum, 1 eks'o-sep'tŭm; 2 ẽks'o-sēp'tŭm, n. One of the calcareous septa developed in the exocele of a coralliferous polyp.

ex'o-skel'e-tal, 1 eks'o-skel'ĭ-tal; 2 ẽks'o-skēl'ē-tal, a. Or pertaining to an exoskeleton.— ex'o-skel'e-ton, n. An external skeleton: any hard or horny external covering, armor, or structure of hardened integument, especially in invertebrates; dermoskeleton: opposed to endoskeleton.

ex'o-smose, 1 eks'os-mōs; 2 ẽks'ŏs-mōs, n. Phys. Sci. 1. Osmose in that direction in which the liquid or gas crosses the septum most slowly. 2. Osmose from an inner to an outer vessel. See osmose, ex, and -smose, [arising, < othein, push.] ex'os-mo'sis†.— ex'os-mot'ic, a. Of, pertaining to, of the nature of, or occurring in exosmose. ex-os'mic.

ex'o-spore, 1 eks'o-spōr; 2 ẽks'o-spōr, n. 1. The outer wall of a spore. 2. An outer coat of the spores of certain fungi, formed from their periplasm. [< EXO- + SPORE.] ex'o-sperm' or ex'o-sper'ma.— ex'o-spo'ral, a.— ex'o-spo'rous, a. Bot. Having naked or exogenously produced spores.

ex'os-tate, vt. To extract the bones from: bone. ex'os-sa'tion†, n.— ex-os'sate‡, a. Boneless.

Ex'o-ste'ma, 1 eks'o-stī'mə; 2 ẽks'o-stē'mə, n. Bot. A genus of tropical American evergreen trees and shrubs of the madder family. The flowers are terminal-panicled, the corolla being long-tubed and having a five-lobed salver-shaped limb. [< EXO- + Gr. stēma, stamen.]

ex'o-stome, 1 eks'o-stōm; 2 ẽks'o-stōm, n. 1. The perforation in the primine or outer integument of an ovule. 2. The outer peristome in mosses. [< EXO- + Gr. stoma, mouth.]

ex'os-tŏs, 1 eks'os-tŏs; 2 ẽks'ŏs-tŏs, n. [-SES, 1 -sēz; 2 -sēs, pl.] 1. Pathol. An excessive bony outgrowth or tumor formed on either the outer or the inner surface of a bone or on a cartilage. 2. Bot. Any of various excrescences on roots or stems of plants. [< EXO- + Gr. osteon, bone.]— ex-os'tosed, pa.— ratiol. Affected with exostosis.— ex'os-tot'ic, a. Relating to, of the nature of, or affected with exostosis.

ex-os'tra, 1 eks-os'trə; 2 ẽks-ŏs'trə, n. [L.] Class. Antiq. 1. A movable chamber in a theater, to be pushed through a door in the back wall of the stage: used to display the consequences of certain acts, as suicides, of which ancient taste did not permit representation in view of the audience. The apparatus may at times have represented an upper chamber or a balcony. Compare PROSCENIUM. 2. A bridge thrown from an attacking tower to the walls of a besieged place.

ex-os'tra-cize, 1 eks-os'trə-sīz; 2 ẽks-ŏs'trə-çīz, vt. To persecute by ostracism; banish; [< Gr. exostrakizō, < ex, out, + ostrakizō; see OSTRACISE.]

ex'o-ten'ta-cle, 1 eks'o-ten'tə-kl; 2 ẽks'o-tĕn'tə-cl, n. Zool. One of the tentacles developed from an exocele in certain polyps (Scleractinia).

ex'o-ter'ic, 1 eks'o-ter'ĭk; 2 ẽks'o-tĕr'ĭç, a. 1. Adapted as a doctrine or teaching to those outside the inner circle of disciples, or to the uninitiated; expressing ideas fit for popular understanding but not the deeper or higher meaning: opposed to esoteric, and originally applied to Aristotle's public lectures.

The exoteric public were, on many subjects, the victims of very vulgar prejudices.

DISRAELI Coningsby bk. v, ch. 6, p. 292. [E. a. & co. 1870.]

2. Embryol. Ectoblastic. 3. Med. External to the organism: applied to diseases or to vital phenomena so originating. [< LL. exotericus, < Gr. exōterikos, < exō; see EXO-.] ex'o-ter'i-cal.— ex'o-ter'i-cal-ly, adv.— ex'o-te'ric-ism, n. Exoteric doctrines or quality; the practise of exoteric teaching.— ex'o-ter-y, n. [Rare.] An exoteric doctrine, a parable; anything exoteric.

ex'o-ter'ic, n. 1. One of the uninitiated; one of the public. 2. pl. Truths adapted for popular instruction; the easily understood principles, as of a system of philosophy.

ex'o-the'ca, n. [-CÆ, pl.] Zoöph. The outer circular calcareous wall lined by ectoderm above the pedal disk of a coral.— ex'o-the'cal, a.— ex'o-the'cate, a. Having a thecæ.— ex'o-the'ci-um, n. Bot. The outer wall of an anther.— ex'o-the-is'tic, a. Existing outside of God: opposed to entheistic.

ex'o-therm, 1 eks'o-thûrm; 2 ẽks'o-thĕrm, n. A chemical compound which, when being synathetically formed from its constituents, liberates heat (energy), and when being decomposed, absorbs heat.

ex'o-ther'mic, 1 eks'o-thûr'mĭk; 2 ẽks'o-thĕr'mĭç, a. Designating those compounds whose formation from elements is attended with the development of heat. [< EXO- + Gr. thermē, heat, < thero, make hot.] ex'o-ther'mous†.

ex'o-thy'ro-pex'y, 1 eks'o-thai'ro-peks'ĭ; 2 ẽks'o-thī'ro-pĕks'ĭ, n. Surg. An operation for goiter in which the thyroid gland is dissected and exposed through an external incision, and consequently undergoes atrophy. [< EXO- + Gr. thyra, door, + pexis, fastening.]

ex-ot'ic, 1 eks-ot'ĭk; 2 ẽks-ŏt'ĭç. I. a. 1. Belonging by origin, nature, or characteristics to another part of the world; brought in from abroad; foreign; strange; as, an exotic flower.

The contrast between indigenous art and exotic art is always marked. HAWEIS Music and Morals, In Eng. p. 411. [H. 1873.]

2. Geol. Produced by eruption, in a plastic condition, through superjacent masses of rock: said of igneous rocks: contrasted with exogenous and indigenous. II. n. Anything introduced from a foreign country; something not native nor naturalized, as a plant.

Many exotics have been brought out his exotics and placed them along the stone balustrades.

IRVING Bracebridge, The Hall p. 13. [G. w. p. 1861.]

[L. exoticus, < Gr. exōtikos, < exō; see EXO-.] ex-ot'i-cal.— ex-ot'i-cal-ness, n.— ex-ot'i-cism, n.— ex-ot'i-sm, n. 1. Exotic state or character. 2. An exotic.

ex'o-to'pic, 1 eks'o-tō'pĭk; 2 ẽks'o-tŏ'pĭç, n. Biol. A spore stage in the life of certain protozoans in which the organism is a mere elongated cell capable of asexual reproduction by sporozoite. The malarial parasite is in this stage of development when introduced into the body by the bite of a mosquito (Anopheles). [< EXOTIC + Gr. spora, seed.]

ex'o-tro'pi-a, 1 eks'o-trō'pi-ə; 2 ẽks'o-trŏ'pi-ə, n. Ophthalm. Deviation of the eyes outward; divergent strabismus.

ex-ot'ro-pism, 1 eks-ot'ro-pizm; 2 ẽks-ŏt'ro-pĭçm, n. Bot. The turning outward of a geotropic organ which has become curved over toward its main axis.

Ex'on-ian, 1 eks'on-ĭ-ən; 2 ẽks'on-ē'ĭ-ən, n. Ch. Hist. An Arian; sometimes so called from the doctrine of Arius that Christ's existence did not begin until the incarnation. See ARIANISM. [< Gr. ex ouk ontōn; ex, from; ouk, not; ontōn, gen. pl. of ōn (ont-), ppr. of einai, be.]

exp., abbr. Export; exportation; exported; express.

ex-pal'pate, 1 eks-pal'pēt; 2 ẽks-pāl'pāt, a. Without palpi. [< EX- + PALPATE.]

ex-pan'd, 1 eks-pand'; 2 ẽks-pănd', v. I. t. 1. To enlarge the dimensions of without increasing the substance; spread out; distend; dilate; as, heat expands metals. 2. To increase in range or scope; widen; extend; enlarge; as, to expand one's business. 3. To spread out by unfolding or extending; open; display; as, a flower expands its petals. 4. Math. To extend or develop, as by performing indicated operations; as, $(a + b)^2$ being expanded becomes $a^2 + 2ab + b^2$.

II. i. 1. To increase in bulk, but not in mass.

All solids expand by heat except india-rubber, and possibly a few others. . . Liquids expand by heat. S. JEVONS Principles of Science bk. i, ch. 8, p. 133. [MACM. 1870.]

2. To become larger in scope or range of action; take on broader or more important dimensions; enlarge.

Day after day I looked into the child's mind, expanding nature. HAWTHORNE Scarlet Letter ch. 6, p. 114. [H. M. & CO. 1880.]

3. To spread out or open; unfold; dilate; as, the petals of a flower expand. 4. Phys. To extend: said of sound specified distance from tip to tip of the outspread wings, as an insect. [< L. expando, < ex, out, + pando, spread.] ex-pans'ŏ†.

SYN. 2, ARTIFICIAL; BROAD; STRETCH; SWELL.

ex-pan'ded, 1 eks-pand'ed, eks-panst'; 2 ẽks-pănd'ĕd, ẽks-pansed', / pănst', a. Her. See DISPLAYED. Compare DISCLOSED.

ex-pand'ed-ness, 1 eks-pand'ed-nes; 2 ẽks-pănd'ĕd-nĕs, n. The condition of being expanded or stretched out.

ex-pand'er, 1 eks-pand'ər; 2 ẽks-pănd'ẽr, n. One who or that which expands. To extend sound specifically: (1) A tool for expanding boiler-flues where they pass through tube-sheets, as in marine and stearnight joints. Called roller expander when fitted with rollers arranged in the shape of a wedge: the commonest form. (2) A tool for tamping lead packing in pipe-joints. (3) Surg. A dilator. (4) Dentistry. An instrument resembling expanding pliers, used for enlarging gold crowns or collars.

Boiler-tube Expander.

ex-pand'ing, ppr. & verbal n. of EXPAND.

— expanding arbor (Mech.), a tool which is fitted with a regulating device by which it can be enlarged to fit different-sized holes. expanding mandrel.— e. auger, bit, drill, or reamer, one whose cutter can be adjusted to make holes of different sizes.— e. brake (Mech.), a brake for a vehicle with a flexible band to spring outward against the revolving rim of the axle, a multiple gear-wheel.— e. clutch, a form of friction-clutch in which the connect is produced by radially expanding a device attached to the shaft until it becomes frictionright with the inside surface of the pulley, thus transmitting rotation from the shaft to the pulley.— e. cultivator, a cultivator which can be adapted to different widths of plant-rows by adjusting or expanding the frame.— e. hanger, a support for a steam-radiator which permits free movement when the radiator is expanded by heat.— e. pliers, a pair of pliers whose jaws separate when the handles are squeezed together, as for stretching open the fingers of gloves.— e. pulley, a pulley whose diameter can be adjusted as required within a certain range.— e. tool, a tool, as a boring-bar tool, the effective working size of which may be varied.

ex-panse', n. Expanded; separated; individual.

ex-panse', / eks-pans'; 2 ẽks-pāns', n. 1. (1) That which lies expanded or spread out in space, especially an extensive surface; a continuous area or stretch; as, an expanse of ocean; a lake's expanse; the blue expanse of heaven. 2. Zool. The distance between the tips of the expanded wings of a bird or insect. 3. [Rare.] Enlargement; expansion. [< L. expansus, pp. of expando; see EXPAND.] ex-pan'sure†.— expanse years (Astron.), a table denoting planetary motions during a given number of years.

ex-pan'si-bil'i-ty, 1 eks-pan'sĭ-bĭl'ĭ-tĭ; 2 ẽks-păn'sĭ-bĭl'ĭ-tĭ, n. 1. Capable or admitting of being expanded.

The most expansible solids are, in general, the most fusible. E. SILLIMAN, JR. Physics § 591, p. 416. [L. B. & CO.]

2. Phys. Produced by expansion, as an open vowel. [< L. expansus; see EXPANSE.]— ex-pan'si-bil-ize, vt.

Capability of being expanded.— ex-pan'si-bil(e-ness?, n.— ex-pan'si-bly, adv.

ex-pan'sile, 1 eks-pan'sĭl; 2 ẽks-păn'sĭl, a. Capable of ex-pan'sil‡, / expanding or of causing expansion. [< L. expansus; see EXPANSE.]

ex-pan'sion, 1 eks-pan'shŏn; 2 ẽks-păn'shŏn, n. 1. The act of expanding, in any sense; the condition or state of being expanded; increase of amount, size, scope, or the like; development.

In physics, expansion is the general effect of heat upon all bodies, both solid and fluid. It varies greatly in amount for different bodies, but as a rule diminishes in proportion to their density. The rate or coefficient of expansion also varies considerably in the case of liquids and solids, but is practically uniform for gases. In solids account is taken of linear, superficial, and cubical expansion; in liquids and gases it is considered as being only cubical, or a matter of change of volume. Gases will expand from a reduce of pressure, absorbing heat in so doing. Compare COEFFICIENT, and CHARLES'S LAW, under LAW.

2. That which is expanded; an expanded continuation or result; an extended surface; an expanded part; an enlargement.

But go to the head of the lake [Geneva], and you find that the Rhone there enters it, that the lake is, in fact, a kind of expansion of the river. TYNDALL Forms of Water p. 6. [A. 1872.]

3. The extent or space over or through which a thing expands; hence, extent in general; unlimited expanse; immensity. 4. Com. Extension of business; the asking or using a larger credit; specifically, increase of the currency.

When there is neither an expansion of commerce nor an increased production of wealth.

H. FAWCETT Political Economy bk. iii, ch. 8, p. 405. [MACM. 1874.]

5. Math. (1) Increase of volume, as of steam in an engine-cylinder when cut off from connection with the source of pressure-supply. (2) The period during which such increase of volume takes place. (3) The point in the stroke at which such increase begins. 6. Naval Arch. The laying out of a vessel's lines to exact proportions and full size, from the drafts and models. 7. Rhet. A rhetorical exercise consisting in the written development of some passage in an author.

Compositions should be frequent and should teach . . . reproductions and expansions. The Academy vol. iv, 1889–1890, p. 183.

8. Math. Development of a function into a series; also, the full expression as developed; as, the expansion of $(a + b)^2$ into $a^2 + 2ab + b^2$. [< LL. expansio(n-), < L. expansus; see EXPANSE.] SYN.: see INCREASE.— adiabatic expansion (Physics), the increase in volume of a gas without the addition to it of external heat, resulting in a lowering of temperature and decrease of intrinsic energy per unit volume, as a consequence of the power expected in the process of overcoming atmospheric resistance.— e. bend, n. A bend in a pipe to allow for expansion or contraction due to change of temperature.— e. bolt, n. A bolt fitted with a split sleeve or other expansible member by which it may be secured in a hole in masonry and the like.— e. box, n. A chamber fitted to a pipe-line supplying gas to an engine, to prevent pulsations and to maintain a uniform flow of gas.— e. gear, n. Gear for expansion, as in compound engines, whereby the steam or gas is conducted successively into cylinders of increasing sizes as the pressure diminishes. It is termed single-expansion, three-stage expansion, etc., depending on the number of stages.— e. steam, n. Steam-engin. A cam supplying the point at which the steam is cut off in stages to work by expansion.— e. stock, n. A cock or valve which makes an allowance for the expansion of the gas in the pipe after it passes the inlet. Such cocks are employed in refrigerating systems to regulate the expansion of the ammonia.— e. coupling, n. Same as EXPANSION-JOINT.— e. curve, n. Steam-engin. The line in an indicator-diagram traced while expansion is going on in the cylinder, and showing the lessening pressure. 2. The hyperbolic curve that indicates the theoretical relation between pressure and volume in the cylinder during expansion.— e. drum, n. A drum made in sections so that its diameter can be expanded; an expanding pulley.— e. engine, n. See COMPOUND ENGINE.— e. fit, n. Mach. A fit effected by expanding one part into another, as a small tube within a larger one.— e. gear, n. Steam-engin. The mechanism for cutting off steam in a cylinder to vary the expansion.— e. joint, n. Steam-engin. A joint which allows a certain endwise movement to compensate for contraction and expansion due to changes of temperature.— e. key, n. See EXPANSION-CURVE.— e. pipe, n. A vertical pipe, open at the top, to allow room for the expansion of the water in a hot-water heating-system.— e. plate, n. Mech. A plate or slide serving as a pipe-support, which permits horizontal movement due to longitudinal expansion or contraction of the pipes which it supports.— e. pulley, n. A pulley or wheel that may be expanded to vary the speed of a machine or mechanism driven by it.— e. rate or ratio, n. The ratio of the volume of steam when expansion is finished to that when it begins.— e. reducer, n. A reducer with one end of a girder, pipe, roof, or other structure, which facilitates the movement of the metal caused by heat-expansion, thus preventing buckling or bending.— e. valve, n. A valve-regulating shaft in an engine, which, by a regulating device attached to the governor, determines the point of cut-off.— e. slide, n. Same as EXPANSION-PLATE.— e. tank, n. An open metal tank at the highest point of a hot-water heating-system through which the flow and return water passes and which allows for the expansion of the water in the pipes, thus preventing breaks.— e. trap, n. Steam-engin. A device for automatically separating entrained water or water of condensation from steam: operating by the expansion of a rod or tube.— e. trunk, n. Ship-building. A small trunk or chamber fitted to the top of a tank-compartment which holds oil or other liquids. It allows for the expansion of the liquid due to heat, and, as the tank is filled to the level of the trunk, it does away with the dangerous motion of the liquid which would be caused by a large free surface in the compartment below.— e. valve, n. A cut-off valve in an expansion-gear designed to give a sharper cut-off and hence produce a greater ratio of expansion.—e-wheel, n. Same as EXPANSION-PULLEY.— initial e., expansion that takes place in a steam-cylinder before full cut-off.— irreversible e. expansion produced in such a way that compression can not be obtained by reversing the operation, as the expansion of steam through a nozzle.— isothermal e. (Physics), increase in volume of a gas caused by decreasing the pressure while keeping the temperature constant.— Maclaurin's e., same as MACLAURIN'S THEOREM. See THEOREM.— rotational e. = cubic, what the expansion-ratio would be if there were no waste clearance, as distinguished from actual expansion-ratio.

ex-pan'sion-ism, 1 eks-pan'shən-izm; 2 ĕks-păn'shən-ĭzm, n. Belief in or advocacy of a policy of expansion, as of commerce, currency, or territory.

ex-pan'sion-ist, 1 eks-pan'shən-ist; 2 ĕks-păn'shən-ĭst, n. One who believes in or advocates expansionism; especially, in recent use in the United States, one who favors enlargement of the national domain.

ex-pan'sive, 1 eks-pan'siv; 2 ĕks-păn'sĭv, a. 1. Capable of expansion; having the power to expand.

ex-pan'sive, } of enlarging, distending, or dilating; caus-ex-pan'sive-ly, } ing expansion. 2. Capable of being expanded; dilatable. 3. Characterised by expansion; presenting an expanse; stretching out; figuratively, free or broad in mind or sympathies. 4. Applying or working by means of expansion; as, an expansive engine; an expansive bit. [< L. expansus; see EXPAND.]— expan'sive-ly, adv.— expan'sive-ness, n. 1. The quality of being expansive. ex'pan-sive'ty-ty, n. Expansibility.

ex'pan-som'e-ter, 1 eks'pan-som'ĕ-tər; 2 ĕks'păn-sŏm'ĕ-tər, n. An instrument for measuring solid substances in bulk. [< EXPANSE, n., + -METER.]

ex par'te, 1 eks pär'tē; 2 ĕks pär'tē. [L.] 1. Law. Emanating from or relating to one side only; as, ex-parte testimony: applied to any act of one party to a suit in the absence of the other. Many things may be done ex parte after proper notice has been given to the opposite party. A deposition or affidavit said to be taken ex parte when only one of the parties attends to the taking of it; an injunction is granted ex parte when only one side has had a hearing. In a reported case the term ex parte signifies that the case has been heard upon the application of the person whose name follows the phrase. An ex-parte examination is one held in the presence of one party when the other is absent. 2. In the interest of or with partiality to one party only, implying bias; as, an ex-parte statement.

ex-pa'ti-ate, 1 eks-pā'shi-āt; 2 ĕks-pā'shĭ-āt, v. [-AT'ED; -AT'ING.] I. tr. To give free range to; diffuse; expand. II. i. 1. To enlarge in language or assistement; discuss copiously or with many words. 2. To roam at large; range widely or unrestrainedly. [< L. expatiatus, pp. of expatior, < ex, out, + spatior, walk, < spatium, space.]— ex-pa'ti-a'tion, n. Syn.: see AMPLIFICATION.— ex-pa'ti-a'tion, n. The act or process of expatiating.— ex-pa'ti-a-tiv'e, a.— ex-pa'ti-a'tor, n.— ex-pa'ti-a-to-ry, a. Expatiating; diffusive.

ex-pa'tri-ate, 1 eks-pā'tri-āt; 2 ĕks-pā'trĭ-āt, v. [-AT'ED; -AT'ING.] I. tr. To drive (a person) from his native land; exile; banish. 2. To change one's citizenship by taking out naturalization papers in another country. 3. To withdraw (oneself) permanently from one's native land. [< LL. expatriatus, pp. of expatrio, < L. ex, from, + patria, fatherland, < pater, father.] Syn.: see BANISH.

ex-pa'tri-ate. a. [Poet. or Rare.] Expatriated. II. n. One exiled.

ex-pa'tri-a'tion, 1 eks-pā'trı-ē'shən; 2 ĕks-pā'trĭ-ā'shon, n. The act of expatriating or exiling; banishment; also, voluntary emigration from one's native land or, specif., the giving up of allegiance to one's native country. [< LL. expatriatus; see EXPATRIATE.]

The mutations which time and expatriation have produced. LYMAN ABBOTT Old Testament Shadows of New Truths (1870.)

ex-pect', 1 eks-pekt'; 2 ĕks-pĕct', v. I. t. 1. To look forward to as certain or probable; feel assured of before the event; anticipate in thought; as, to expect a letter; all men expect to die. 2. To count upon as right and duly relying upon; require; as, to expect obedience.

England expects every man to do his duty; but it would be chimerical to expect, i. e. anticipate, a universal performance of duty. WHARTON Logic appx. 305. See def. 7, n. only.

3. [Archaic.] To wait for. 4. To suppose; suspect; as, I expect it is done: a colloquial solecism.

Expect is very widely misused both in England and the United States for think, believe, suppose, also for suspect. Expect refers to the future, usually with the implication of interest or desire. Yet "I expect it is" is very common. Expect is sometimes used for suppose, as in expect likely or expect probably. In this case it is not the expectancy, but the future event, that is likely or probable. One may say "I think it is likely," "I am sure it is not, ever, or the like] probable," or "It seems likely" or "probable." When another person's expectancy is matter of conjecture, one may say "You probably expect to live many years"; i. e., "I think it probable that you expect," etc., but "Probably you expect," etc., would be better.

II. i. [Archaic.] To wait. [< L. expecto, < ex, out, + specio, from, of specio, see.]

SYN.: see ABIDE; ANTICIPATE.— ex-pect'a-bl(ĕ), a. That may be expected.— ex-pect'er, ex-pect'or, n.— ex-pect'ing-ly, adv. In an expectant manner.

ex-pec'tan-cy, 1 eks-pek'tən-sı; 2 ĕks-pĕk'tan-sy, n. 1. The act or state of expecting; expectation. 2. An object of expectation. 3. Law. The state of being expected; suspension; abeyance; as, an estate in expectancy. 4. R. C. Ch. Same as EXPECTATIVE, n., 2.

ex-pec'tan-ce, 1 eks-pek'tənt; 2 ĕks-pĕk'tant, a. 1. Having an expectation; waiting or looking forward in expectation: used absolutely or with of.

With longing eyes I wait, Expectant of her.
TENNYSON At the Church Gate st. 1.

2. Med. Relying upon nature's curative efforts without much direct treatment; used in view of such reliance; as, the expectant method. [F., < L. expectant(-s); see EXPECTANCY.]— expectant state, see ESTATE.— 6. treatment (Pathol.), allowing a disease to run its natural course, merely relieving symptoms.— ex-pec'tant-ly, adv.

ex-pec'tant, n. 1. One who is waiting confidently, especially for something on which his hopes depend. 2. [Scot.] Formerly a candidate for the ministry not yet yet licensed to preach.

ex'pec-ta'tion, 1 eks'pek-tē'shən; 2 ĕks'pĕc-tā'shon, n. 1. The act or state of expecting, or of looking confidently for something; as, to be in expectation; expectation of success. 2. A prospect of good to come; advantage hoped for; specifically, contingent prospect of wealth: often plural; as, great expectations.

God never instructs us by holding out false expectations.
THOMELIUS On Daniel, Proph. Interpret. p. 109, (trans., 1864.)

3. Something expected or looked for. 4. The present value of a probability connected with some future event. 5. Med. Reliance upon nature's curative power. 6†. Promise of excellence or success. [< L. expectatio(n-), < expecto; see EXPECT.] ex-pec't'i-tə-tiv, } ex-pec'ta-tive, } Forming an object of expectation; exciting expectation. ex-spec'tive-ly, adv. II. n. 1. Anything in expectation or prospect. 2. Eccl. Hist. A reversionary right to a benefice granted by papal or royal decree.

ex-pec'ta-to'ri-um, 1 eks-pek'tə-tō'rı-əm; 2 ĕks-pĕc'ta-tō'rĭ-um, n. [-R-A, pl. [-A.] [LL.] An medieval times, a disputation between bachelors at a university.

ex-pect'ed-ly, 1 eks-pekt'ed-li; 2 ĕks-pĕct'ĕd-ly, adv. According to expectation.

ex-pect'less, a. Not expected; unsuspicious.

ex-pec'to-rant, 1 eks-pek'tə-rənt; 2 ĕks-pĕc'to-rant. I. a. Med. Relating to or promotive of expectoration. II. n. A medicine used to promote expectoration. [< L. expectorant-, ppr. of expectoro, < ex, out, + pectus (pector-), breast.]— ex-pec'to-ra-tiv'e, a.

ex-pec'to-rate, 1 eks-pek'tə-rēt; 2 ĕks-pĕc'to-rāt, v. [-RAT'ED; -RAT'ING.] I. t. 1. To discharge or emit from the lungs, throat, or mouth; hawk or hawk up and spit forth; spit out. 2. [Rare.] To eject or cast aside (anything worthless, unwholesome, or unpleasing). II. i. To raise and spit out mucous matter from the lungs, throat, or windpipe. 2. To eject saliva from the mouth; spit. [< L. expectoratus, pp. of expectoro; see EXPECTORANT.]— ex-pec'to-ra'tor, n.

ex-pec'to-ra'tion, 1 eks-pek'tə-rē'shən; 2 ĕks-pĕc'to-rā'shon, n. The act of expectorating; also, matter expectorated; spittle. expectoration of operation, a due purplish sputum, due to the presence of blood, expectorated by patients suffering with pneumonia, cancer, or other destructive pulmonary disease.

ex-pe'dē, 1 eks-pē'dē; 2 ĕks-pē'dē, n. [Scot.] To expedite. 2. Scots Law. To issue a writ and have it officially sealed and signed; as, to expede a writ. ex-pe'di-ate.

ex-pe'di-en-cy, } ex-pe'di-ence, } 2 ĕks-pē'dı-ĕn-cy, n. 1. The quality of being proper, suitable, and advantageous under given circumstances; fitness to meet the requirements of a particular case; advantageousness; advisability; propriety. 2. That which is fit, suited, practicable or best to be done, all things being considered. 3. Ethics. The doctrine that the morally right consists in doing what is most expedient or advantageous under the circumstances: often, but not necessarily, held as a form of Benthamism, utilitarian wisdom. 4†. Quickness or dispatch; expedition. 5†. An expedition; enterprise. 6†. An expedient. [< F. expédience, < LL. expedientia, < L. expedien(t-)s, ppr. of expedio; see EXPEDITE.] ex-pe'di-ent-ness. [Rare.]

ex-pe'di-ent, 1 eks-pē'dı-ənt; 2 ĕks-pē'dĭ-ĕnt, a. 1. Serving to promote a desired end or interest; suitable under the circumstances; contributing to personal advantage; proper or desirable. 2. Pertaining to utility rather than to justice or advantage rather than principle. 3†. Speedy; expeditious. [OF., < L. expedien(t-)s; see EXPEDIENCY.] SYN.: advantageous, beneficial, convenient, favorable, payable, profitable, proper, suitable, useful, worth while.

ex-pe'di-ent, n. That which furthers or promotes a desired end; means of accomplishing anything; especially, means available in an emergency; resource: shift.

Point to the cure, describe a Saviour's cross
As God's expedient to retrieve his loss.
COWPER Truth 166.

ex-pe'dien-te, 1 eks-pē'dyen-tē; 2 ĕs'pe-dyĕn'te, n. Sp. Law. Judicial action.

ex-pe'di-en'tial, 1 eks-pē'dı-en'shəl; 2 ĕks-pē'dĭ-ĕn'shal, a. Of or pertaining to expediency.— -ly, adv.

ex-ped'i-tate, 1 eks-ped'ı-tēt; 2 ĕks-pĕd'ĭ-tāt, vt. In old English forest laws, to cut off the balls or claws of the fore feet of (a dog), to prevent his chasing the king's deer. [< LL. expeditatus, pp. of expedito, < L. ex, from, + pes (ped-), foot.]— ex-ped'i-ta'tion, n.

ex'pe-dite, 1 eks'pə-dīt; 2 ĕks'pe-dīt, vt. [-DIT'ED; -DIT'ING.] 1. To hasten the movement or progress of; advance, especially by removing impediments; facilitate; promote; accelerate; as, to expedite one's return. 2. To send or issue officially; dispatch. [< L. expeditus, pp. of expedio, < ex, out, + pedi-s, foot.]

ex'pe-dite†, a. Unimpeded; prompt; expeditious.

ex'pe-di'tion, 1 eks'pə-dish'ən; 2 ĕks'pe-dĭsh'on, n. 1. A journey, march, or voyage, generally of several or many persons, for a definite purpose; as, an arctic expedition. 2. The body of persons engaged in such a journey, march, or voyage, together with their equipment. 3. The state or quality of being expeditious; speed; dispatch; as, the work was done with expedition. 4†. Progress; march. [OF., < L. expeditio(n-), < expedio; see EXPEDITE.] ex'pe-di'tion†. SYN.: see JOURNEY. Compare ADVENTURE.— ex'pe-di'tion-a-ry, a. Of the nature or for the purpose of or constituting an expedition; as, an expeditionary force.— ex'pe-di'tion-er, n. One who makes or takes part in an expedition. ex'pe-di'tion-ist [Rare].

ex'pe-di'tious, 1 eks'pə-dish'əs; 2 ĕks'pe-dĭsh'ŭs, a. 1. Accomplished with energy and speed; quick; as, an expeditious piece of work. 2. Moving or going swiftly; speedy; nimble.

The public papers will be expeditious messengers of intelligence. ALEX. HAMILTON in The Federalist No. lxxxiv, p. 540. [O. F. P. 1888.]

ex-ped'i-tive†; ex-ped'i-to-ry†. SYN.: see ACTIVE; SWIFT.— ex'pe-di'tious-ly, adv. ex'pe-dite'ly†.— ex'pe-di'tious-ness, n. ex'pe-dite'ness].

ex-pel', 1 eks-pel'; 2 ĕks-pĕl', vt. [EX-PELLED', EX-PEL'LING.] 1. To drive out or off by force or by authority; force out; dismiss; eject; as, to expel an enemy from the country. 2. [Rare.] To keep out or off; exclude. 3†. To discharge; shoot. [< OF. expeller, < L. expello, -ere, out, + pello, thrust.] SYN.: see BANISH; EXTERMINATE.— ex-pel'la-bl(ĕ), a. 1. That may or can be expelled. 2. Liable to expulsion, as from a club, society, or expel'lant. 1. n. A substance or agent having the power to expel; expelling; as, expellant treatment in medicine. II. a. That which expels, as a purgative.— ex'pel-lee', n. One expelled.— ex-pel'lent.— ex-pel'ler, n.

ex-pend', 1 eks-pend'; 2 ĕks-pĕnd', v. I. t. 1. To pay out or lay out; use up; disburse; spend; as, to expend money, labor, thought, or time.

Life was not lent us to be expended in that idle niirth which resembles the crackling of thorns under the pot.
SCOTT Abbot ch. 1, p. 21. [D. F. & CO.]

2†. To consider; weigh.

II. i. 1. To pay out money or the like; disburse; as, he is ready to expend freely. 2. [Rare.] To be consumed or spent; as, the oil in a lamp expends easily. [< L. expendo, < ex, out, + pendo, weigh.]— ex-pend'a-bl(ĕ), a.— ex-pend'er, n.

ex-pen'dĭ-tor. 1 eks-pen'dı-tər; 2 ĕks-pĕn'dĭ-tŏr, n. Obs. Eng. Law. A disburser of public funds, especially for repairing sewers.— ex-pen'dĭ-trix, n. A woman who acts as expenditor.

ex-pen'dĭ-ture, 1 eks-pen'dı-chur or -tür; 2 ĕks-pĕn'dĭ-chur or -tür, n. The act of expending or making an outlay of anything, as money or time; also, that which is expended or consumed; disbursement.

A really life may be from first to last all expenditure; just as the temple lamps consumed themselves away in giving light.

ex-pense', 1 eks-pens'; 2 ĕks-pĕns', vt. [Colloq., U. S.] To charge with costs incurred, as in remunerative as, expense this office with charges. Used by express companies.

ex-pense', n. 1. (1) The laying out or expending of money or other resources, as time or strength; disbursement; expenditure; hence, drain on resources; detriment; loss; as, at the expense of health. (2) The habit of expending. 2. Money expended; outlay; charge; as, expenses for the journey. 3. [Rare.] Excessive or lavish outpouring.

Be not surprised at this expense of woe!
POLLOK Course of Time bk. v, l. 163.

[OF., < L. expensum, neut. of expensus, pp. of expendo; see EXPEND.] ex-pens'ful; ex-pense'ful [Rare].

SYN.: cost, expenditure, outgo, outlay. The cost of a thing is whatever one surrenders or gives up for it, intentionally or unintentionally, or even unconsciously; expense is what is laid out by calculation or intention. We say, "he won his fame at the cost of his life"; "I know it to my cost"; we speak of a joke at another's expense; at another's cost would seem to make it a more serious matter. There is a tendency to use cost of what we pay for a possession, expense of what we pay for a service; we speak of the cost of goods, the expense of making them. Outlay is used of some definite expenditure, as for the purchase of supplies; outgo of a steady drain, or of indefinital expenses. See PRICE.— ANT.: gain, income, proceeds, profit, receipts, receipt, revenue, return, returns.— ex-pense'-mag'a-zine, n. A magazine of ammunition for immediate distribution.— general expense, or charge (Railroad.), an expense for the entire road's benefit, and not for any particular department.— ex-pense'-less, a. Without expense or cost.

ex-pen'sĭ-bles, 1 eks-pen'sı-blz; 2 ĕks-pĕn'sĭ-blz, n. Mil. Articles, as ammunition, entered in his books against one person payments made to or sums due from another. [L., expensi latio, a statement of expense.]

ex-pen'sive, } ex-pen'sive-ly, } 1 eks-pen'sıv; 2 ĕks-pĕn'sĭv, a. 1. Causing or involving much expense, in any sense of the word; costly. 2. [Rare.] Prodigal; extravagant; as, an expensive man.— ex-pense'ful [Archaic].— ex-pen'sive-ly-ly, ex-pense'ful-ly [Archaic], adv. — ex-pen'sive-ness, n. The quality of being costly; cost or of incurring expense; costliness; extravagance.— ex-pense'-ful-ness [Rare].

ex-pen'the-sis, 1 eks-pen'thı-sis; 2 ĕks-pĕn'thĕ-sĭs, n. Gram. The lengthening of a word by affixes.

Exxenthesis is the lengthening of a word, as by the use of affixes, whether prefixes or suffixes.
HALDEMAN Analytic Orthography ch. 9, § 205, p. 50. [L. 1860.]
[< EX- + -penthesis in EPENTHESIS.]

ex-per'ge-fac'tion†, n. An awakening.

ex-per'i-ence, 1 eks-pē'rı-ens; 2 ĕks-pē'rĭ-ĕns, vt. [-ENCED; -ENC-ING.] 1. To become acquainted with by personal trial, feeling, and the like; undergo personally; make proof or trial of; feel; as, to experience pain or pleasure.

How long we have possessed the verb experience I do not venture to say; but, as long ago as 1631, it was used by Sir Thomas Browne; in 1804, by Scott; and, before the end of the nineteenth century, it had become familiar enough to find its way into a dictionary.
FITZEDWARD HALL False Philology p. 32, [s. 1872.]

2†. To train or practise; as, he experienced himself in seamanship. 3†. To prove; try.

SYN.: see KNOW. Experience, whether used as verb or noun, should not be applied to what does not enter or has not entered into personal consciousness, the feelings or life. It would of course be absurd, as some of the hypercritics suggest, to say "The hay-crop is the most deficient experienced in many years." But not only is the use of the verb to express what is or has been a matter of personal experience perfectly legitimate—as when one is said "to experience joy, sorrow, hope," or the like—but it is also true that the usage has been well-nigh universal among the best writers of English from the 16th century to the present time.— to experience religion [Colloq., U. S.], to undergo a change of heart; be converted.

ex-per'i-ence, n. 1. The acquiring of knowledge by use of one's own faculties of sense and judgment, or the knowledge so acquired; experimental knowledge; especially, the state of such knowledge in an individual, as an index of wisdom or skill; as, he is a lawyer of wide experience; experience teaches.

Until Cæsar was forty years of age his military experience was of the most limited kind.
R. F. LEIGHTON Rome ch. 46, p. 303. [S. M. & CO. 1889.]

2. Something undergone, enjoyed, or the like; a particular instance of experimental knowledge; the condition of actual participation.

Hard experiences are often the foundation stones of a successful life. CANON Dr. Senior ch. 34, p. 266. 1e. & co. 1885.]

3. Spiritual exercise of mind, especially, those feelings which follow upon and are connected with religious conversion. 4. Psychol. & Philos. In Locke's philosophy, every form of knowledge of one's own mental operations observation, whether by sense-perception or self-consciousness. The English and French sensationalists and associationalists limit it to sensations and the reproduced and mechanically connected images of sensations. Kant, accepting this meaning in a modified way, undertook to show that experience of this sort is not the result of cognition, or science, or even in sense-perception, but that it must itself be organized by certain a priori or native forms of the functioning of sense and intellect. The more profound thinkers have uniformly held that experience should include, in its data those faiths, valid assumptions, instructive and necessary forms of reasoning and the conclusions from them, which are found to be essential elements of the most simple and fundamental species of so-called human experience. 5†. An experiment. 6†. A product of practical knowledge or workmanship; as a maxim or contrivance. [OF., < L. experientia, < experien(t-)s, ppr. of experiri, try, < ex, out, + peritus, experienced.]

SYN.: see ACQUAINTANCE; KNOWLEDGE — experience meeting [U. S.], a meeting for prayer or conference, especially among Methodists, where those present relate their religious experience.— e. table (Life Insurance), a mortality table based on the records and reports in one or more companies.— ex-pe'ri-ence, v.

ex-pe'ri-enced, 1 eks-pi'ri-ənst; 2 ĕks-pē'ri-ənst, pa. 1. Taught by experience, practise, or repeated observation; practised; skilled; as, an experienced coachman. 2. Undergone, met with, or proved as reliable; approved, as a remedy or medicine. ex-pe'ri-ent†.

ex-pe'ri-enc-er, 1 eks-pi'ri-ens-ər; 2 ĕks-pē'ri-ĕns-ẹr, n. [Rare.] 1. One who experiences. 2. An experimenter.

ex-pe'ri-en'tial, 1 eks-pi'ri-en'shəl; 2 ĕks-pē'ri-ĕn'shal, a. Of, pertaining to, or acquired by experience; empirical.

Compare, then, the first state of this experiential series with the last. MARTINEAU Types of Ethical Theory vol. ii, bk. ii, branch i, ch. 2, p. 386. (MACM. 1891.)

[< experient(ia); see EXPERIENCE.] — ex-pe'ri-en'tial-ism, n. The theory that all knowledge is based on and must be tested by sense and experience, in the narrower meaning of the word, as distinguished from mystic intuition; opposed to rationalism.— ex-pe'ri-en'tial-ist, n. 1. One pertaining to experientialism. II. n. One who holds the theory of experientialism.— ex-pe'ri-en'tial-ly, adv.

ex-per'i-ment, 1 eks-pe'ri-mənt; 2 ĕks-pĕr'i-mənt, v. I. i. To make experiments; make a test or trial, submit a thing or person to any process or ordeal, as for the purpose of investigation or discovery; as, he has been experimenting with a new engine.

From evil and forbidden things some good we think to win,
And to the last analysis experiment with sin.
ALICE CARY January st. 7.

II†. t. 1. To put to the proof. 2. To experience. [< F. expérimenter, < LL. experimento, < L. experimentum; see EXPERIMENT, n.] ex-per'i-ment-ize or -ise†.

ex-per'i-ment, n. 1. Any action or operation designed to discover, test, or illustrate some truth, principle, or effect; especially, in science, the arrangement of the elements or essential features of some object or process so as to permit convenient observation with a view to test some hypothesis or theory; a test. 2. Something undergoing the test of actual experience, as opposed to that whose practicability or usefulness has been fully demonstrated; also, depreciatively, as, your boasted institutions are but an experiment. 3†. Experience; trial; expedient. [OF., < L experimentum, < experior; see EXPERIENCE.] Since an experiment is a trial, the colloquial phrase to try the experiment uses the word as a cognate accusative, as in to die the death, die the death. The usual expression in speaking of a formal or exact trial is "make the experiment" or "perform the experiment" (a series of) experiments for the discovery of truth; he performs experiments before a class to demonstrate that truth. — Aristotelian e., a test of the weight of a small object between the fingers when parallel and noting that it produces a normal sensation, and then holding it between the tips of the fingers when crossed, and noting that the object seems to be doubled.— Bain's e. (Psychophys.), an experiment or determination conducted without the principal ingredient or object of test, to ascertain the correct working conditions, purity of reagents, etc. — Cavendish's e., an experiment first made by Henry Cavendish, showing the mean density of the earth by means of a torsion balance. — Cornu's e., an experiment to demonstrate the velocity of light by using a toothed wheel. — e. station, an institution or locality provided with scientific means for experimental studies in economic farming, fish-culture, etc.: in the United States there is at least one experiment station in each State and Territory, generally organized under the Hatch act, but supported in part by the State.— Fechner's cloud e. (Psychophys.), an experiment to test the powers of discrimination by examining clouds of similar tone or color by the naked eye and glasses of different degrees of gray color.— Fechner's parallax e. (Psychophys.), an experiment showing that a decrease of the stimulus of the organs of vision in certain conditions increases the vividness of sensation. An illuminated surface is regarded first by the naked eye, then with the same eye behind darkened glass, thus making the surface appear darker; then if the obstructed eye is closed the brightness increases, the brighter sensation counteracting the diminished. — Fechner's shadow e. (Psychophys.), an experiment having the same object and inference as the Fechner cloud experiment. When one of two shadows thrown upon a screen by a Rumford photometer is hardly distinguishable from the background, the shadow viewed through glasses of different shades of gray retains apparently the same degree of vividness.— Flick's Inspirator e. (Psychophys.), an experiment showing that the field of smell is limited to the exterior field of breathing. It is performed by inserting in the nostril a paper funnel conveying an odor to the interior of the nose. The odor is imperceptible until the tube is withdrawn to the middle of the nostril.— Florentine e., an experiment showing that a liquid can not be raised by suction more than 34 feet: said to have been first called to the attention of physicists by workmen in Florence.— inclining e. (Naval Arch.), the inclining or heeling of a vessel to determine the position of the center of gravity.— Kundt's e., an experiment made with a glass tube containing gas and a light powder and fitted with a rod. When the rod is vibrated, the distances between the rings of powder setting at the nodes of the vibration will be one-half the wave-length, hence the velocity of sound in the gas is determined.— Mariotte's e., an experiment for showing the blind-spot in the retina. It is made by closing the left eye and looking with the right at the left-hand one of two black spots on a white wall. The waiting newly backward from the wall a point is found where the right-hand spot disappears.— Melde's e. (Acoustics), an experiment producing loops and nodes in a cord by attaching one end to the prong of a vibrating tuning-fork and suspending the other end over a pulley by means of a weight.— Meyer's e. (Psychophys.), an experiment in the visual sense of contrast. It is produced by laying gray paper upon a colored surface and noting the increased contrast caused by the elimination of contours when both are covered with white tissue.— Michelson's e., an experiment to demonstrate the speed of light by means of mirrors placed at long distances.— Oersted's e., the deflection of a magnetic needle by bringing near it a straight conductor carrying a current of electricity, showing that the neighborhood of an electric current is a magnetic field.— puzzle e., same as BLANK EXPERIMENT, 2.— Scheiner's e., the doubling of the image of an object by looking at it out of focus through pinholes in a card.— test e., same as BLANK EXPERIMENT, 2.— Torricelli's e., the inversion of a tube, closed at one end and filled with mercury, in a vessel of mercury, the liquid in the tube remaining supported at the height of about 30 inches, the discovery of the principle of the mercurial barometer. See TORRICELLIAN. — Wundt's mirror e., an experiment which illustrates the reflection of objects lying outside of the immediate range of vision.

ex-per'i-men'tal, 1 eks-pe'ri-men'təl; 2 ĕks-pĕr'i-mĕn'tal, a. 1. Pertaining to, resulting from, based on, or known by experiment; guided or proceeding by experiment; as, experimental philosophy; an experimental physicist. 2. Pertaining to, growing out of, or learned by personal experience; guided by experience. 3†. experimental, < L. experimentum; see EXPERIMENT, n.] — experimental philosophy, philosophy based exclusively on experiment and observation; inductive philosophy.— e. proposition (Logic), a proposition based on experience. — e. religion, vital piety as distinguished from mere religious formality.— ex-per'i-men'tal-ism, n.

ex-per'i-men'tal-ist, 1 eks-pe'ri-men'təl-ist; 2 ĕks-pĕr'i-mĕn'tal-ist, n. One who makes experiments, especially scientific experiments; in physical science, one who proceeds by the experimental method as distinguished from the deductive method.

ex-per'i-men'tal-ize, 1 eks-pe'ri-men'təl-aiz; 2 ĕks-pĕr'i-mĕn'tal-iz, vt. [-IZED; -IZ'ING.] 1. To experiment. 2. To carry on investigations according to the rules of experimental science or philosophy.

A boy may experiment in catching flies, or a smatterer may experiment in philology; but a philosopher, when he governs himself, in his researches, by the complex of canons which constitute the experimental philosophy, experimentalizes.
FITZEDWARD HALL False Philology p. 57. (n. 1892.)

ex-per'i-men'tal-ly, 1 eks-pe'ri-men'təl-i; 2 ĕks-pĕr'i-mĕn'tal-y, adv. In an experimental way; by experiment or experience.

ex-per'i-men-ta'ri-an, 1 eks-pe'ri-men-tē'ri-ən; 2 ĕks-pĕr'i-mĕn-tā'ri-an. I. a. Experimental. II. n. An experimentalist.

ex-per'i-men-ta'tion, 1 eks-pe'ri-men-tē'shən; 2 ĕks-pĕr'i-mĕn-tā'shon, n. The act or practise of experimenting.

ex-per'i-men-ta'tive (ēt), a. [Rare.] Experimental.

ex-per'i-ment-ed†, pa. Experienced.

ex-per'i-ment-er, 1 eks-pe'ri-mənt-ər; 2 ĕks-pĕr'i-mĕnt-ẹr, n. One who is an object of experiment.

ex-per'i-ment-or, 1 eks-pe'ri-ment-ər; 2 ĕks-pĕr'i-mĕnt-ẹr, n. One who conducts an experiment, whether in a single instance or in general.

ex-per'i-ment-ist, 1 eks-pe'ri-ment-ist; 2 ĕks-pĕr'i-mĕnt-ist, n. One given to or skilled in experiments; an experimentalist.

ex-per'i-men'tum, 1 eks-pe'ri-men'təm; 2 ĕks-pĕr'i-mĕn'tum, n. [-TA, pl.] [L.] An experiment.— experimentum crucis, a crucial experiment. See CRUCIAL.

ex-pert', 1 eks-pə̈rt'; 2 ĕks-pẹ̈rt', v. t. 1. [Colloq.] To examine as an expert, as accounts. 2†. To experience.

ex-pert', a. 1. Possessing skill and facility resulting from experience or practise; practised; dexterous; adroit; as, expert workmen; an expert rider. 2. Characterized by skill; done or produced with the ability gained by practise; as, expert handling. 3. Proceeding from an expert; as, expert testimony. 3†. Experienced; approved on testing. [F., < L. expertus, pp. of experior; see EXPERIENCE.] SYN.: see CLEVER; SKILFUL.

ex'pert, 1 eks'pə̈rt; 2 ĕks'pẹ̈rt (XIII), n. 1. One who has special skill, experience, or knowledge, as in some department or branch of science; a skilled or practised person; specialist; as, an expert in whist. 2. Law. (1) A scientific or skilled witness, whose opinions on questions involving skill or science are received in evidence.

The expert gives the results of a process of reasoning which can be mastered only by special scientists. F. WHARTON Law of Evidence sec. 439, p. 406. (1884.)

(2) [Rare.] An appraiser testifying under oath.— ex'pert-ize, vi.

ex-pert'ly, 1 eks-pə̈rt'li; 2 ĕks-pẹ̈rt'ly, adv. 1. In an expert manner; skilfully; as, he played it expertly.

ex-pert'ness, 1 eks-pə̈rt'nes; 2 ĕks-pẹ̈rt'nĕs, n. The quality of being expert; skilfulness; dexterity; facility; as, expertness in surgery.

ex'pi-a-ble, 1 eks'pi-ə-bl; 2 ĕks'pi-a-bl, a. That may be expiated, or atoned for; as, an expiable wrong. [OF., < L. expio; see EXPIATE.]

ex'pi-ate, 1 eks'pi-ēt; 2 ĕks'pi-āt, vt. [-AT'ED; -AT'ING.] 1. To atone for by suffering or reparation, or both; make satisfaction or amends for; as, to expiate a crime.

Italy has expiated with centuries of slavery the crime of having conquered the world. CRISPI in N. Am. Review Nov., 1891, p. 621. 2†. To avert. 3†. To cleanse from sin by religious ceremonies. [< L. expiatus, pp. of expio, < ex, out, + pio, appease, < pius, pious.]— ex'pi-a"tist, n.— ex'pi-a"tiv(e), a.— ex'pi-a"tor, n.

ex'pi-a'tet, a. Expired: finished.

ex'pi-a'tion, 1 eks'pi-ē'shən; 2 ĕks'pi-ā'shon, n. 1. The active means of expiating, or of making reparation or satisfaction, as for offense or sin; the removing of guilt by suffering punishment; atonement, or an atonement. 2†. A religious ceremony supposed to avert evil. [< L. expiatio(n-), < expio; see EXPIATE.] ex'pi-a-ment†. SYN.: see PROPITIATION; SACRIFICE.— ex'pi-a'tion-al, a. Pertaining to, or the nature of, or for the purpose of expiation; as, expiational work.

ex'pi-a-to-ry, 1 eks'pi-ə-tō-ri; 2 ĕks'pi-a-to-ry, a. Having the power or character of an expiation; offered in expiation; indicating or noting expiation; as, expiatory sacrifice.

How largely the strictly expiatory idea . . . obtained among peoples outside of Palestine, we cannot now tell. . . . It was wholly rare.
Srosna Divine Origin of Christianity p. 107. [RAN. e. s. 1884.]

ex'pi-la'tion, 1 eks'pi-lē'shən; 2 ĕks'pi-lā'shon, n. [Rare.] The act of plundering; spoilation; also, that which is obtained by plundering.

ex'pi-ra'tion, 1 eks'pi-rē'shən; 2 ĕks'pi-rā'shon, n. 1. The coming of anything to an end; termination; or in course; termination; close; as, the expiration of a year, or of a contract, or policy. 2. The act of breathing out, as air from the lungs: opposed to inspiration; hence, also, the outbreathing of life; death. 3. That which is expired, or the sound made in respiration. 4. [Rare or Obs.] Exhalation or evaporation. [< L. expiratio(n-), < expiro; see EXPIRE.] SYN.: see BREATH; END.— expiration group (Phonol.), a series of sounds limited to one expiration.— e. interval (Phonol.), the period of time occupied by an expiration group: a series of sounds between two inhalations.— e. of free time (Contracts), the limit of time allowed for unloading a car, after which the consignee is liable for demurrage.

ex-pire', 1 eks-pīr'; 2 ĕks-pīr', v. [EX-PIRED'; EX-PIR'ING.] I. i. 1. To breathe out; emit from the lungs. 2. [Archaic.] To send forth, as a vapor or odor; exhale; as, the rose expires fragrance. 3†. To bring to an end; breathe out (the last breath, or the soul).

II. i. 1. To breathe out, as life; die; perish; as, he expired at midnight. 2. To come to an end naturally or in course; terminate; as, his furlough expires on Tuesday. 3. To send out the breath; as, to inspire and expire. 4†. To fly out, as shot with a blast. [< F. expirer, < L. expiro, < ex, out, + spiro, breathe.] ex-pyre't. SYN.: see DIE.— ex-pir'a-bl(e), a. That may expire; mortal.

ex-pir'ant, n. One who is about to expire; a dying person.

ex-pir'a-tor, n. One who or that which expires; specif., an instrument for sending out a stream of air or vapor.— ex-pir'a-tor-y, a. Pertaining to the expiration of breath. — ex-pi'rer, n. [Rare.] A convict who has served his time of punishment.— ex-pir'er, n.

ex-pir'ing, 1 eks-pir'in; 2 ĕks-pir'ing, pa. 1. Of, pertaining to, or uttered at the time of dying, ending, closing; as, expiring groans. 2. At or just before death; final; as, an expiring struggle. 3. That breathes out. — ex-pir'ing-ly, adv.

ex'pi-ry, 1 eks'pi-ri; 2 ĕks'pi-ry, n. 1. A coming to an end; expiration.

Watt withdrew from the firm in 1800, on the expiry of his patent for the condensing steam-engine.
SMILES Men of Invention, Murdock p. 143. [N. 1885.]

2. [Rare.] Same as EXPIRATION.

ex-pis'cate, 1 eks-pis'kēt; 2 ĕks-pis'kāt, vt. [-CAT'ED; -CAT'ING.] To fish out or up; hence, to discover, bring to light, or make known (something concealed or difficult to get at). [< L. expiscatus, pp. of expiscor, < ex, out, + piscor, fish, < piscis, fish.]— ex'pis-ca'tion, n.— ex-pis'ca-tor. n.— ex-pis'ca-to-ry, a. [Rare.] Tending to expiscate or bring to light; as, an expiscatory question.

ex-plain', 1 eks-plēn'; 2 ĕks-plān', v. I. t. 1. To make plain or clear; cause to be understood; show the meaning, nature, or workings of; give reasons for; interpret; as, to explain a problem; this explains his conduct. 2†. To make plane; flatten out.

II. i. To give an explanation. [< OF. explaner, < L. explano, < ex, out, + planus, flat.] SYN.: see INTERPRET; SOLVE.— to explain away, to get rid of by explanation; as, to explain away a difficulty.— ex-plain'a-bl(e), a. That may be explained; intelligible. — ex-plain'er, n.— ex-plain'ing-ly, adv.

ex-plan'd, pp. Explained. S. S.

ex'pla-nate, 1 eks'pla-nēt; 2 ĕks'pla-nāt, a. Bot. & Zool. Spread out flat; extending outwardly, as if marginally dilated, as the pileus of hymenomycetous fungi. [< L. explanatus, pp. of explano; see EXPLAIN.]

ex'pla-na'tion, 1 eks'pla-nē'shən; 2 ĕks'pla-nā'shon, n. 1. The act, process, or means of explaining; interpretation; elucidation; as, he made the matter clear by explanation. 2. The meaning assigned or adduced to explain anything; sense; significance; as, there are two explanations of this passage. 3. The process of settling a disagreement, or reconciling a difference, by explaining the circumstances; reconciliation; as, to come to an explanation. 4. Rhet. That department of invention whose object is to make a new conception or modify an old one by presenting the object of discourse intelligibly and favorably. Explanation is usually accomplished by definition and the explanatory rhetorical processes. See the quotation.

The chief and more characteristic work in explanation consists in presenting the theme distinctly. . . . The particular processes by which this is chiefly effected are: Definition, Division, Description, Division, Partition, Exemplification, and Comparison and Contrast. DAY Art of Discourse § 73, p. 65. (n. 1857.]

ex-plan'a-to-ry, 1 eks-plan'ə-tō-ri, 2 ĕks-plān'a-to-ry, a. Serving or tending to explain; conveying, containing, or of the nature of explanation; as, an explanatory clause or epithet. [< LL. explanatorius, < L. explanatus; see EXPLANATE.] ex-plan'a-tiv(e)†.— ex-plan'a-to-ri-ly, adv.— ex-plan'a-to-ri-ness, n.

ex'ple-ment, 1 eks'pli-mənt or -ment; 2 ĕks'ple-ment, n. Geom. The amount by which an angle is less than 360°. Compare COMPLEMENT and SUPPLEMENT. [< L. expleo, fill, + -mentum, -MENT.]— ex'ple-men'tal, a. Math. Of or pertaining to an expleument; constituting an expleument; forming a circle together with another arc; forming a straight together with another sect.

ex'ple-tive, 1 eks'pli-tiv; 2 ĕks'ple-tiv, a. Serving to ex'ple-tive,) fill out or complete, hence, added or inserted for emphasis, or redundantly [< LL. expletivus, < L. expletus, pp. of expleo, fill out, < ex, out, + pleo, fill.] ex'ple-to-ry†.— -ly, adv.— -ness, n.

ex'ple-tive, n. 1. An interjection, often profane, usually employed for emphasis only; an exclamatory oath; as, his choice of expletives was unique. 2. Gram. & Rhet. A word or syllable not required by the sense or construction, but employed for rhetorical or rhythmical reasons, as in the quotation:

When I do count the clock that tells the time.
SHAKESPEARE Sonnet xii.

3. Something serving to fill out; a mere embellishment; an addition. 4. [Rare.] Something used by way of expletory addition.

[We use] the words Basilica, Church, and Round Church, to designate the three [forms of Romanesque churches], employing some explicative when we wish to be more precise. JAS. FERGUSSON Hist. Arch. vol. i, pt. ii, bk. i, p. 430. [D. M. & CO. 1883.]

ex'pli-ca-bl(e), a. ı ckş'plı-kə-bl; ẹ ckş'plı-ca-bl, a. Capable of explanation or solution; that can be unfolded or made plain. [< L. explicabilis, < explico; see EXPLICIT, a.] — ex'pli-ca-bl(e)-ness, n.

ex'pli-cand', ı ckş'plı-kand'; ẹ ckş'plı-cănd', n. That which is or is to be explained. [< L. explicandus, fut. pass. gerundive of explico; see EXPLICIT, a.] ex'pli-cate, ı ckş'plı-kēt; ẹ ckş'plı-cāt, v. [-CAT'ED; -CAT'ING.] I. t. 1. (1) To clear from involvement or obscurity; unfold; explain; as, to explicate a mystery. (2) To develop or expand, as a statement. 2†. To open.

II. i. To give an explanation. [< L. explicatus, pp. of explico; see EXPLICIT, a.] SYN.: see INTERPRET.— ex'pli-cate, a. Unfolded; explained.— ex'pli-ca-tor, n.

ex'pli-ca'tion, ı ckş'plı-kē'shən; ẹ ckş'plı-cā'shon, n. 1. Explanation, especially of a passage in any text, or definition, as of a word, by unfolding what is implied in it. 2. The act or process of explaining; that which explicates. 3†. An explanation for the settling of a difficulty.

ex'pli-ca-tive, ı ckş'plı-kə-tiv; ẹ ckş'plı-ca-tiv, a. 1. Explanatory; explicative; unfolding; explaining. 2. Logic. Setting forth in the predicate something already contained by implication in the subject; analytic: said of propositions, and opposed to ampliative; as, "man is a rational being" and "matter is extended" are explicative judgments. — ex'pli-ca-to-ry†.

Some propositions are distinguished as explicative or essential, because they merely affirm of their subject a predicate which is known to belong to it by all who can define the subject.

W. G. DEVENS Logic, pt. ii, ch. iii, § 68. [D. APP. & CO. 1878.]

ex'pli-cit, ı ckş'plı-sit; ẹ ckş'plı-cit. [L.] It is unfolded, t. e. finished: a contraction for explicitus est: formerly used at the end of a book to mark the conclusion and was a survival of the scroll. Compare FINIS.

ex-plic'it, ı ckş-plı'sit; ẹ ckş-plı'cit, a. 1. Plainly expressed, or that plainly expresses; having no disguised meaning or reservation; open; unreserved. 2. Logic. Brought out definitely in words; not merely implied: opposed to implicit. 3†. Plain; without folds. [< L. explicitus, pp. of explico, unfold, < ex, out, + plico, fold.]

SYN.: express. Both explicit and express are opposed to what is merely implicit or implied. That which is explicit is unfolded, so that it may not be obscure, doubtful, or ambiguous; that which is express is put forth so as to be decidedly that it may not be forgotten nor overlooked. An explicit statement is so clear to be misunderstood; an express command is not to be disregarded. — ANT.: implicit.

ex-plode', ı cks-plōd'; ẹ cks-plōd', v. [EX-PLOD'ED; EX-PLOD'ING.] I. t. 1. To cause to burst in pieces by force from within; break suddenly and violently in fragments with noise; also, to cause to expand violently or pass suddenly from a solid to a gaseous state; as, the powder exploded the shell; to explode dynamite. 2. To show the falsity or fallacy of; refute; expose; destroy; as, Professor Huxley exploded the theory of abiogenesis.

To explode error, on whichever side it lies, is certainly to secure progress. MAGINNIS Essays, Hilt in Vol. i, p. 114. [W. V. B. 1866.]

3. Physiol. To develop suddenly or rapidly, as disease; cause, by an exciting action, to be suddenly manifest. 4. To drive out with violence and noise. 5. Phon. To pronounce with a sudden expulsive breath, as one of the consonants p, b, t, d, k, g. 6†. To drive from the scene; hoot or hiss away, as an actor.

II. i. 1. To fly or break in pieces suddenly and with a noise; be blown, driven, or burst outward by pressure; make a noise as if by bursting; as, the shell exploded; we exploded with laughter. 2. To flash noisily into gas or flame, as gunpowder; specif., in physical science, to be changed in chemical state, with rapid rise of temperature, as fluid or liquid to a gas (as by chemical decomposition or sudden vaporization), so as suddenly to transform considerable energy into the kinetic form. The action is usually initiated at some one point or region, as by friction, fire, or jar, and then extends unaided throughout the body. 3. To come suddenly to an end as by bursting; collapse. 4. Physiol. To break out or become suddenly manifest; as, the irritation exploded in convulsions. [< L. explodo, drive off by clapping, < ex, out, + plaudo, clap.] — ex-plo'dent, n. Phon. An explosive consonant. See EXPLOSIVE, a. — ex-plo'der, n. One who explodes; as, an explosive in blasting; one who or that which explodes. 2. One who hoots an actor.

ex-ploit', ı cks-ploit'; ẹ cks-plōit', v. I. t. 1. To put to use; make commercially available; specially, to utilize or employ in selfish schemes; bring out for one's own advantage without regard to rights or right; as, to exploit one's talent for speculation; the capitalists exploit the people.

In this sense the term is an importation from the French, now almost fully naturalized, owing to its brevity and usefulness.

They did not exploit the passion of patriotism. JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL My Study Windows p. 89. [O. & CO. 1871.]

2. To search for or after; explore in quest of.

It is said that the resources of Africa are to be exploited.

BAYARD TAYLOR Greece and Russia p. 279. [G. P. P. 1865.]

3. To account at length; explain in detail; descant upon.

The rapid industrial development of the South is a subject so often exploited as to be stale. [Rare.]

I. B. POTTER in The Forum Nov., 1891, p. 382.

4†. To achieve by labor; accomplish; establish.

II. i. 1. [Rare.] To explore or experiment. 2. Mining. To work a mine, as distinguished from opening it, as by borings, etc. [< F. exploiter, < LL. explicto, < explico; see EXPLOIT, n.] — ex-ploit'a-bl(e)†, a. That may be exploited; available for use. — ex-ploit'a-bl(e)†, n. Tending or serving to exploit. — ex-ploit'er, n. One who exploits, in any sense. — ex-ploit'ure, n. The act of exploiting; achievement.

ex-ploit', n. 1. A deed or act; more especially, an act marked by or indicative of heroism, spirit, daring, or adventure.

The successful exploits of the rash are rather to be ascribed to good fortune than to courage. CERVANTES Don Quixote tr. by Jervas, pt. ii, bk. ii, ch. 28, p. 516. [P. & C.]

2†. Profit; advantage. [F., < LL. explicta (pl.), writ, < L. explicitus; see EXPLICIT, a.] SYN.: achievement, act, deed, feat. We speak of a thoughtless or careless act, but not of a thoughtless or careless deed. A feat exhibits strength, skill, personal power, whether mental or physical, especially the latter; as, a feat of arms; a feat of memory. An exploit is a conspicuous or glorious deed, involving valor or heroism, usually manifested with strength, skill, loftiness of thought and readiness of resource; an achievement is the doing of something great and noteworthy; an exploit is brilliant, but its effect may be transient; an achievement is solid, and its effect enduring. See ACHIEVEMENT; ACT.

ex'plot-ta'tion, ı cks'plot-tē'shən; ẹ cks'plōt-tā'shon, n. 1. The act of exploiting; especially, the process of bringing out into use of hitherto neglected natural resources.

The exploitation of Inner Africa through the agency of chartered companies is regarded by some as a retrogressive step.

A. S. WHITE in Harper's Monthly Nov., 1891, p. 924.

2. Employment for one's own use or advantage, or for purely selfish ends; strictly selfish utilization. ex-ploit'ure, n. 3. Preliminary investigation; reconnoitering. [F., < exploiter; see EXPLOIT, v.] ex'plo-ra'tion, ı cks'plo-rē'shən; ẹ cks'plo-rā'shon, n. 1. The act of exploring; a searching; examination; especially, geographical research through unfamiliar or previously unknown regions; as, the exploration of Central Africa. 2. Med. The examination of internal organs or parts. [< L. exploratio(n-), < explore; see EXPLORE.]

ex-plore', ı cks-plōr'; ẹ cks-plōr', v. [EX-PLORED'; EX-PLOR'ING.] I. t. 1. To subject to search or examination; look over in order to examine; search through the parts of; visit or travel in or over in order to note the features, conditions, or state of; scrutinize; examine; as, to explore a mountain; to explore a wound with a probe. 2. [Archaic.] To seek after; pursue, as a road.

Satan . . . towards the gates of hell Explored his solitary flight. MILTON P. L. bk. ii, l. 632.

II. i. To make explorations. [< L. exploro, < ex, out, + ploro, cry out.] ex-plor'ate†, SYN.: see EXAMINE.— ex-plor'a-bl(e), a.— ex-plor'a-tiv(e), a. Tending to exploration; exploring. — ex-plor'a-to-ri-al, a. Pertaining to exploration, or serving to explore; exploring. — ex-plor'a-to-ry, a. Pertaining to exploration, or serving to explore; exploring. — ex-plore'ment, n. [Rare.] The process of exploring.

ex-plor'er, ı cks-plōr'er; ẹ cks-plōr'er, n. 1. One who explores; especially, one who travels, as in a slightly known region, to make discoveries.

The explorer entering a new country makes sure his line of return by barking the trees.

H. S. SALT in Science of Science bk. i, p. 122. [MACM. 1879.]

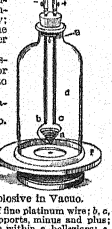
ex-plor'ing, ı cks-plōr'ıng; ẹ cks-plōr'ing, pa. Engaged in or intended for making explorations; as, an exploring expedition.— exploring coil, same as EXPLORER, 2 (5).

ex-plo'sion, ı cks-plō'zhən; ẹ cks-plō'zhon, n. 1. (1) The act of exploding; rupture, dilatation, disposition, or other similar process resulting in a great and sudden development of gases, and consequent violent increase of pressure, usually causing a loud report. See EXPLODE. (2) Acro. The power of the aeroplane engine.

An explosion may be defined as a chemical reaction which is effected in an exceedingly short space of time with the evolution of a large quantity of heat and the consequent production of energy in a shock. When the explosion is progressive, that is, starts at an initial point and continues from one group of particles to the next, and so on, it is called detonation. Then it is a kind of burning and is analogous to ordinary combustion. When, however, the combustion is effected simultaneously throughout the mass in an infinitesimal part of time, the action is called detonation. The development of an explosion may often be calculated as resulting from a single chemical reaction. [ED.]

This may be accomplished by the propagation of the shock from particle to particle in an explosive, or by a shock from one explosive body to another, as in the case of detonators.



New International Encyc. vol. vii, p. 373. [D. M. & CO. '05.]

2. A sudden breaking apart, shattering, or bursting in pieces by internal pressure, as that of gas or steam.

The sentence was a shell, a flame, and every now and then terrible explosions took place.

ANON. Poems Chinese Garden p. 16. [S. & W. 1889.]

3. A sudden, violent outbreak or bursting forth or into action, as of physical forces or of human emotion; as, there was an explosion of splenic anger. 4. Physiol. The sudden discharge of a neural cell or group of cells. 5†. A driving off by clapping. [< L. explosio(n-), driving off by clapping, < explodo; see EXPLODE.] SYN.: see RUPTURE.— detonative explosion, an explosion caused by the initial discharge of a detonator containing fulminating mercury. — explosion of Servetus, of Vermuyden, A calorimeter consisting of a steel bomb in which an explosive substance is enclosed with oxygen sufficient to combustion and then fired by electricity; the heat evolved is measured by the rise of temperature in a body of water in which the bomb is submerged.

Explosive in Vacuo.

ex-plo'sive, ı cks-plō'sıv; ẹ cks-plō'siv, a. 1. Of or pertaining to explosion; liable to explode or cause explosion.

Voltaire was of impatient explosive nature.

CARLYLE Frederick vol. iv, bk. xvi, p. 363. [L.]

2. Phon. Involving or produced by a slight sudden explosion of the breath; mute; non-continuous; as, one of the explosive consonants (p, b, t, d, k, g). See MUTE; SURD. [< L. explosus, causing explosion, + -IVE.]

a, coil of fine platinum wire; b, c, copper supports, minus and plus; d, vacuum within a bell-glass; e, hook from which the explosive chamber is suspended; f, support.

ex-plo'sive, n. 1. Any substance that may cause an explosion by its sudden combustion or decomposition. See list in the next column.

Explosives will not explode in vacuo. When gunpowder is placed in a coil of platinum wire (a) attached to thicker wires of copper (b, c) to be connected with a galvanic battery, or dynamo, and inserted in a large glass jar (e) placed on an air-pump plate (f), on exhausting the air from the jar and then raising the thin wire to a white heat with the electric current, the gunpowder will not explode. From 15 to 20 seconds are required for the gradual combustion of the powder. When mercury or silver fulminates are placed in the wire coil and heated in a similar way in vacuo, about 5 seconds are necessary for their more speedy decomposition, whereas if heated in the coil in the open air the fulminates explode with a sharp sound. If a lock of the most explosive variety of guncotton, about a foot in length, is suspended over the coil and the electric current then removed, on heating the coil white-hot by an electric current, the guncotton will slowly disappear without any spark or flame. When a drop of nitroglycerin placed in a metallic cup on a dielectric pole 2 inches in diameter, connected with a battery, is touched with a pencil of gas-carbon attached to the other pole, altho the heat of the electric current is intense, the explosive burns quietly with a green flame: even the pressure of the atmosphere is not sufficient to cause it to detonate. Priestley fired gunpowder in vacuo, heating it by concentrating the sun's rays on it with a lens or burning-glass.

2. An explosive consonant; explodent.— high explosive, an explosive stronger or more sudden in its action than ordinary gunpowder, as nitroglycerin and dynamite.— phonic e., an explosive consonant.

LIST OF EXPLOSIVES.

Revised by Charles Edward Munroe, Professor of Chemistry and Dean of the Faculty of Graduate Studies, George Washington University: formerly chemist of the Torpedo Corps, U. S. Navy.

(1) Blasting-powder, also black blasting-powder, of the United States, is a mixture of approximately 73 parts of sodium nitrate, 16 of charcoal, and 11 of sulfur. Three of the grains most commonly offered for sale are styled CC, C, F, FF, FFF, FFFF. Of these CC represents grains about one-half inch in diameter, FFFF grains about one-sixteenth inch in diameter, and the other marks grains intermediate in size between these two. European blasting-powder generally, and a small proportion of the American, is an inferior gunpowder.

(2) Gunpowder, ordinarily so called, is a mixture of nitre, charcoal, and sulfur in varying proportions. According to its use it is called artillery, fixed, cannon, musket, rifle, musket, shooting, sporting, or war powder; according to its size it is called meshed, superfine grain designated as F, F, G., fine grain F, G., large or cannon grain F, G., cubic or pebble, rifle R. L. G., mammoth, and according to its form it may be cubical, gravel, hexagonal, octoheiral, pebble, pellet, polyhedral, prismatic, sphero-hexagonal, waffle, etc. Among the varieties are Bernese (containing 1 part nitre, 1 charcoal, and 10 sulfur); brown (79 n., 18 c., 3 s.); Chinese (61.5 n., 23.1 c., 15.4 s.); cocoa (same as brown); Curtis and Harvey (78.1 n., 12.7 c., 9.2 s.); Dundee (75 n., 15 c., 10 s.); Fenlein, Fehlesen, fortis explosive, Freiberg, Gacon, Gallahers, glycerocritter, grenadine, haloxyline, Harrison, heraklin, Hesschen, Hindy, Jubilee, Kilp, Lafitte, Lancaster, Laveracture, Lloyd, Lobb, Maxim, Matteen, Miller, Murtinedin, Newton, Nobel, Oliver, orient, Oxland, peralite, Poch, pandrafine, peroxite, Pettman, Pigou, Prentice, Robert's, rock, safety blasting, saxifragine, Schaffer's, Soutiago, triumph safety, Violette, Walker, Windsor, Wynant, and xanthine.

(3) Chlorate mixtures, essentially those that owe their explosive qualities to admixture with potassium chlorate or perchlorates, which are combined with a nonexplosive but combustible substance containing carbon and hydrogen: as— ballistite powder, Ammonite powder, Baron and Cauvet powder, Belford's powder, Bolton powder, Bradbury powder, Buckley powder, Callow powder, Chanu powder, Cheddite, Clement powder, Cotter's powder, Davey's powder, Dittmar's powder, Ehrhardt's powder, etnite, explosive paper, Fenton's powder, Flèron powder, French green powder, Fuch's powder, gandite powder, Gates powder, Hellhoff's powder, Hercules powder, Grahan powder, Hafenegger's powder, Hahn's powder, Hall's powder, Hannan powder, Harrhon's powder, Himalayite, Hochstätter's compound, Hough's powder, Jaline, Jolly powder, Kellow's powder, kinetite, Kraft's powder, Kohler's powder, Macintosh powder, Melland's paper powder, Melville's powder, Michalowski's powder, Mohnicke's powder, Mowbray's powder, Nathan's powder, Noble's powder, Paine's powder, Parone's powder, Pattison's powder, Peley's explosive paper, Peltier's powder, Pertutesi's powder, Petry powder, Pettman's powder, peptonite, pyronome, rackarock, Rave's powder, Reichen's powder, Reveley's powder, Reynold's powder, Ricker's powder, Robert's powder, Rogers's powder, Sandoy, Schiessinger's powder, schnedlin, Sherr's powder, Shrapnel's powder, Siemen's powder, silestic, Sleeper's powder, Smith's powder, Spence's powder, Turpin's powder, vril, Ward's powder, Weiss' powder, white gunpowder, Wigfall's powder, Williams' powder, Zalliwsky powder.

(4) Dynamites. Mixtures of nitroglycerin with an absorbent or dope, either inert, or sometimes with combustible, as charcoal, or some member of the gunpowder or guncotton class, which are fired by detonation. They include Abel's powder, Atlas powder, amidogene, ammonia dynamite, ammonia gelatin, ammonia gelatin dynamite, ammoniakrut, asbestos powder, atlas powder, ballistite, blasting gelatin, Borland powder, Brady powder, Brain's powders, Brodessen powder, Bronstadt powder, carbo dynamite, Castellanos powder, champion powder, Clarke's explosive, Coad's explosive, Colonia powder, Dean's explosive, diagson, Dittmann's powder, Dittmar's explosive, dualin, dynamagnite, dynamite, dynamite au charbon, dynamite blanche de Pauillles, dynamite d'ammoniaque, dynamite de beghead, dynamite de Krümmel, dynamite de Trauzl, dynamite de Zanky, dynamite gomme de Pauillles, dynamite noire, dynamite roupe, dynamites de Vouges, Engel's powder, extra powder, fahnehjelm, forcite, Fowler's explosive, fulmurite, fulminatine, gelatin dynamite, gelignite, giant powder, Girard powder, glonoine, glukodine, glycero-pyroxiline, glyoxiline, Gotham's explosive, Gotthelf powder, Heela powder, Helck powder, Hercules powder, Hill's powder, Hinde's explosive, Horsley's powders, Judson dynamite, Judson powder, Jupiter powder, kraft, Lewis powder, lignin dynamite, lignose, lithofracteur, magnesia powder, matagnite, mataziette, meganite, metalline nitroleum, mica powder, Millot powder, Miner's friend powder, Miner's Powder Company dynamite, Monkay's explosive, Morse's explosive, Neptune powder, nitroglycerin nitroleum, nitrolite, nitromagnite, Nobel's powder, Norbin, Ohlson powder, paleine, petrailite, porifers nitroleum, potentia, potentite, Prudhon's explosive, Rendrock, Rhodes dynamite, roburite, Rutenberg's explosive, safety nitro-powder, Schultze's powder, sebastine, selentite powder, seranine, Shaein's powder, straw dynamite, thunderite, thunder powder, Titan powder, Titan powder, Trauzl's dynamite, vigorite, virite, Vogt powder, Vulcan powder, Warren's powder, wetter-dynamite, Wilhelm's powder, zoolight powder.

(6) Flameless explosives. Nitrate mixtures, nitric ester explosives or nitrosubstitution explosives to which substances have been added to reduce the length of flame or to damp it. The cooling substances used are principally salts containing water of crystallization, such as alum or sal soda, or volatile metallic salts, such as ammonium, potassium, or sodium chlorid, or ammonium nitrate.

(7) Fulminates. (a) Salts of fulminic acid, such as gold, mercury, and silver fulminates; (b) substitutes for mercury fulminate for use in initiating detonation. Examples of these are amines, such as gold and silver amines; diazo-compounds, such as diazobenzene nitrate; nitro-substitution compounds, such as trinitrotoluene or toluol and triazotates or hydronitrates, such as silver triazoiate.

(8) Nitric ester explosives, formed by replacing hydrogen in alcohols by nitro (NO$_2$) groups. Examples are cellulose nitrates (guncotton, pyroxylin), nitrocellulose, nitroerythrol, erythryl nitrate, glyceryl nitrate (nitroglycerin), methyl nitrate, nitroglucose, nitroglnin, nitrolin, nitromannite, nitromuslases, nitromannite, nitrosaccharin. These are frequently compounded with other active or inert substances to form explosive mixtures. The dynamites and the guncotton powders are examples of such nitric ester explosives.

(9) Nitro-substitution explosives, formed by replacing hydrogen in hydrocarbons or phenols by nitro (NO$_2$) groups. Examples are nitrenesals, nitrobenzene, nitrobenzol, nitroethanes, nitromethanes, nitronaphthalenes, nitrophenols, nitrotolienes (nitrotoluol), nitroxylenes. Commercial explosives composed of these substances alone or mixed with other substances are bellite, cerasite, emmensite, Favrersham powder, Favier's explosive (Ammonite, Minet's safety explosive), favierite, gelbite, lenetite, lovette, lydillite, maximite, melinite, nitramite, securite, roburite, ronsite, and trotyl.

(10) Permissible explosives. Those which have passed the tests of the U. S. Bureau of Mines and are declared suitable for use in coal-mines. July 1, 1910, they were Ætna coal-powder A, AA, B, C, and C; bituminite No. 1; black diamond No. 1, 2, and No. 3; bonobel No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, No. 4, No. 1-L. F., and No. 2-L. F.; coalite No. 1 and No. 2-D; coal special No. 1, No. 2, No. 3-B, and No. 3-C; collier powder No. 1, No. 4, and No. 5; decoite special, Eureka No. 2-L. F.; giant A low-flame dynamite, giant B low-flame dynamite, giant C low-flame dynamite, Hecla No. 2; kanite A; kanite No. 1; kanite No. 2; M. C. bituminite A, and B; monobel No. 1, No. 2, and No. 3; titanite No. 3-P; trojan coalpowder A; tunnelite No. 5, No. 6, No. 7, No. 8, No. 6-L. F.; and No. 8-L. F.

(11) Permitted explosives. Those which have been authorized by the English government for use under certain regulations and prescribed conditions in coal-mines: abbotite, amasite, amnonal B, ammonite, ammonsite, aphrodite, arctic carbonite, arktite, bellite No. 1, bellite No. 3, bobbinite, britonite, cambrite, carbonate, cetite, clittite, clydite, collieries steelite, cornish powder, curtisite, dahmenite A, dahmenite, dragonite, electronite, excellite, extra carbonite, Favcrsham powder, fracturite, good luck, haylite No. 1, kolax, kynite, kynite, combustible, monobel powder, negro powder, Nobel ammonia powder, Nobel carbonite, normanite, oaklite No. 1, oaklite No. 2, odite, permonite, phenix powder, pitlite, rexite, ripping ammonal, ripplite, roburite No. 3, russelite, St. Helen's powder, samsonite, stomonal, stowite, swallite, titanite No. 1, tutol, victorite, virite, Westfalite No. 1, Westfalite No. 2, Withnell powder.

(12) Picric powders. Those mixtures include such of the nitro-substitution explosives as owe their explosive power to picric acid or a picrate. They are Abel's powder, Boritte's powder, brounlite, Brugères powder, Castellan powder, Desglonde powder, cerasite, emmensite, Fontaine's powder, howlitte, lithotrite, lydlite, melinite, oxonite, picrate of potash, picric and picrate powder, picrite, rack, shimose or shimonose, Tschirner's powder, Turpin's explosive, victorite.

(13) Smokeless powder. Cellulose nitrates, or mixtures of cellulose nitrates with nitroglycerin, or with metallic nitrates which have been converted into colloids. The agents used for colloidizing are acetone, amyl acetate, or ether-alcohol. The treatment produces a colloidization and subsequent hardening on the surface only, or throughout the mass. Acetone colloids of cellulose nitrate and nitroglycerin, cordite, filite, Leonard's powder, Maxim's powder. Amyl acetate colloids hardened throughout (sporting), du Pont, Hazard, oriental, and Walsrode. Ether-alcohol colloids (military), Austrian, German, Japanese, Russian, and United States (sporting), hardened superficially, cotton powder, Dittmar's wood powder, E. C. powder, Schultze powder, stabilite, W. A. powder, Wetteren powder.

(14) Sprengel explosives form group consists of compounds whose components are non-explosive, but become explosive by mixing them together at the time of use or just before. All explosives of this class require a detonator. They are Divine's explosive, heilhoffite, oxonite, panclastite, rackarock, romit, roselite, and Turpin's mixtures.

(15) Miscellaneous explosives. Besides the foregoing there are a number of explosives or explosive compositions not included in any grouping. These include Alexander's fulminating powder, amorces, anilin fulminate, Bousfield's fulminate, Canouil's explosive, carbo-oxonite, Caro's fulminate, chromate de benzine diazotée, colliery safety-lighters, Daddow's fuse, dunnite, Fournier explosive, fulminate nitroglycerin-guncotton compound, German spills, grisounite, Hahn's priming-composition, Hunter's mining-fuses, Johnson fulminating powder, metallic safety-fuse, Meyer and Meritz mixture, Millhaem's composition, miners' spills, nitrate of tin, nitrogen chlorid, nitrogen iodid, nitrogen sulfid, Perkin's fulminating powder, Preisenhammer's mixture, Rave's mixture, safety-cartridges, safety-fuse, toy caps, tube safety-fuse, Volney's explosive, Wenziger's mixture, Winiwarter's fulminating composition.

ex-po'll-a'tion†, n. Spoliation.

ex-pol'ish†, vt. To polish exactly.

ex-po'nent, 1 adj. [< L. expō'nens; 2 ēks-pō'nĕnt, a. Serving to explain or explain. [< L. exponen(t-), ppr. of expono, indicate, < ex, out, + pono, place.] — exponent proposition (Logic), a proposition setting forth an expoinble proposition in regular terms. See EXPONIBLE.

ex-po'nent, n. 1. Any person or thing that represents the character or principles of something: an authoritative exemplifier; an index; as, Franklin was the exponent of American principles in France. 2. One who explains or expounds; as, an exponent of the philosophy of history. 3. An illustrative example of a general proposition. 4. Alg. A symbol indicating a power, written above and to the right of the quantity to be raised to that power; an index. A positive whole exponent indicates the number of times that the quantity affected is to be taken as a factor; thus, $a^3 = aaa$. A fractional exponent indicates that the quantity is to be raised to the power whose index numerator and that the root denoted by the denominator is then to be extracted. A negative exponent indicates that the reciprocal of the quantity is to be raised to the power shown. Any quantity with zero for an exponent is equal to unity.

exponent of a ratio, the quotient obtained by dividing the antecedent by the consequent.—e. of irregularity, in a permutation, the number of its cycles.

ex'po-nen'tial, 1 ēks'po-nen'shal; 2 ēks'po-nĕn'shal, a. Relating to or involving exponents, especially unknown or variable ones.—exponential curve, a curve which an exponential equation represents.—e. quantity, a quantity with an unknown or variable exponent.—e. series (Math.), any series developed from an exponential expression; specif., the infinite convergent series

$$e^x = 1 + \frac{x}{1} + \frac{x^2}{1.2} + \frac{x^3}{1.2.3} + \frac{x^4}{1.2.3.4} + \cdots$$

—e. theorem, the exponential series considered as expressing a theorem.

ex'po-nen'tial, n. The function expressed by e (the base of the Napierian system of logarithms) raised to the power indicated by the variable; as, e^x is the exponential of x.—ex'po-nen'tial-ly, adv.

ex'po-nen'ti-a'tion, 1 ēks'po-nen'shi-ā'shon; 2 ēks'po-nĕn'shi-ā'shon, n. The act or process of using exponents.

ex-po'nit-ble, 1 ek-spō'nit-bl; 2 ēks-pō'nit-bl, a. Capable ex-po'nit-ble, } of being explained or expounded. [< L. expōnibilis, < EXPONERE.] — exponible proposition (Logic), a proposition not expressed in, but reducible to, regular logical form. See EXPONENT.

ex-port', 1 eks-pōrt'; 2 ēks-pōrt', vt. To carry or send out or away, especially for trade from one country to another. [< L. exporto, < ex, out, + porto, carry.]

The trade of Egypt was very great with other countries, to which she exported corn, linen, and papyrus.

RAWLINSON Herodotus vol. ii, bk. ii, p. 205, note 2. [A. 1885.]

— ex-port'a-bl(e), a. Fit to be exported; that can be exported.—ex-port'a-bil'i-ty, n.

ex'port, 1 eks'pōrt; 2 ēks'pōrt, n. 1. That which is exported; in general, goods or any article of trade or merchandise sent from one country to another; properly, and as used in the United States Constitution, goods sent to a foreign country: usually in the plural; as, exports to Europe; exports exceed imports. 2. The act of exporting; exportation, as, the export of rum to Africa.

ex'port-a'tion, 1 eks'pōr-tā'shon; 2 ēks'pōr-tā'shon, n. 1. Com. The act or practise of exporting, or of sending out commodities from one country to another for traffic or sale.

The king forbade the exportation of wool and wool-fells to Flanders. LINGARD England vol. iii, p. 153. [n. c. 1827.]

2. An export commodity. 3. [Rare.] The act of carrying out or removing. [< L. exportatio(n-), < exporto; see EXPORT, vt.] ex-port'er, 1 eks-pōrt'er; 2 ēks-pōrt'er, n. One who exports; especially, one whose business it is to send goods by way of trade to another country or region; as, an exporter of tobacco.

ex-pose', 1 eks-pōz'; 2 ēks-pōz', vt. [EX-POSED'; EX-POSING.] 1. To lay open to any influence or action; put in the way of any power or operation; leave to the action of the weather, or of enemies; as, to expose a picture to the weather; he exposed the sensitized plate to the light; the slate lay exposed in the quarry; his act exposes him to ridicule.

2. Given to speaking without written or prepared matter; as, an extemporaneous preacher. — ex-tem'po-ra'ne-ous†, adv.

SYN.: extemporary, extempore, impromptu, improvised, offhand, unpremeditated. Extemporaneous is now chiefly applied to addresses of which the thoughts have been prepared, and only the language and incidental treatment left to the suggestion of the moment, so that an extemporaneous speech is understood to be any one that is not read or recited; impromptu keeps its original meaning of something that springs from the instant; the impromptu utterance is generally brief, direct, and vigorous; the extemporaneous speech may chance to be prosy. Offhand is the more emphatic as to the readiness and freedom of the utterance. Unpremeditated is graver and more formal, denoting absolute want of preparation, but is rather too heavy a word to be applied to such light, ready utterance as is generally designated by impromptu. — ANT.: elaborated, premeditated, prepared, read, recited, studied, written. — ex-tem'po-ra'ne-ous-ly, adv. — ex-tem'po-ra'ne-ous-ness, n.

ex-tem'po-ra-ry, ı eks-tem'po-rə-ri; 2 ĕks-tĕm'po-rā-ry, a. 1. Extemporaneous. 2. Made for the occasion; extemporized; as, an extemporary shelter. — ex-tem'po-ra-ri-ly, adv.

2. Alg. [Rare.] To eliminate (an unknown quantity). 3. [Rare.] To drive beyond the borders of a country; expel.

Among the Athenians, whatever was the cause of a man's death, by falling upon him, was exterminated or cast out of the dominions of the republic. BLACKSTONE Commentaries p. 301.

[< L. exterminatus, pp. of extermino, < ex, out; and see TERMINATE, v.] ex-ter'mine†.

Syn.: annihilate, banish, destroy, eradicate, expel, extirpate, exterminate, root out, uproot, wipe out. The word exterminate is applied to races of men or animals, and is now almost exclusively used for removal by death; individuals are now said to be banished or expelled. Extirpate is always applied to numbers or groups of plants which it is desired to remove effectually from the soil; a single tree may be uprooted, but is not said to be eradicated; we labor to eradicate or root out noxious weeds. To extirpate is not only to destroy the individuals of any race of plants or animals, but the very stock, so that the race can never be restored: we speak of eradicating a disease, of extirpating a cancer, exterminating wild beasts or hostile tribes; we seek to eradicate or extirpate all vices and evils. See ABOLISH.— Ant.: augment, beget, build up, cherish, colonize, develop, foster, increase, plant, populate, propagate, replenish, settle.— ex-ter'mi-na-bl(e²), a.— ex-ter'mi-na-tiv(e²). 1. a. Tending or serving to exterminate. II. n. That which exterminates. — ex-ter'mi-na''tor, n.— ex-ter'mi-na-to-ry, a. Tending to exterminate; of or pertaining to extermination.

ex-tem'po-ra'ne-ous, l. eks-tem'po-rē'nı-us; 2. ĕks-tĕm'po-rā'ne-ŭs, a. 1. Done or made without much or any preparation; composed or uttered on the spur of the moment without having been studied or digested; offhand; unpremeditated; as, an extemporaneous oration.

The celebrated Italian poet, Metastasio, was the son of a common mechanic, and was when a little boy to sing his extemporaneous verses about the streets.
WAYLAND Pursuit of Knowledge vol. i, p. 46. (n. 1859.)

2. Given to speaking without written or prepared materials; as, an extemporaneous preacher. — ex-tem'po-ra'ne-ant.

SYN.: extemporary, extempore, impromptu, improvised, offhand, unpremeditated. Extemporaneous is now chiefly applied to addresses of which the subject has been prepared, and only the language and incidental treatment left to the suggestion of the moment, so that an extemporaneous speech is understood to be any one that is not read or recited; impromptu keeps its original sense, denoting something that springs from the instant; the impromptu utterance is generally brief, direct, and vigorous; the extemporaneous speech may chance to be prosy. Offhand refers chiefly to ease in the readiness and freedom of the utterance. Unpremeditated is graver and more formal, denoting absolute want of preparation, but is rather too heavy a word to be applied to such apt, ready utterance as is generally designated by impromptu. — ANT.: elaborated, premeditated, prepared, read, recited, studied, written. — ex-tem'po-ra'ne-ous-ly, adv. — ex-tem'po-ra'ne-ous-ness, n.

ex-tem'po-re, l. eks-tem'po-ri; 2. ĕks-tĕm'po-re, a. Extemporaneous; unstudied.

It is . . . had always extempore words, if not extempore sense, at command.
EDGEWORTH Moral Tales p. 29. (n. 1887.)

ex-tem'po-re, n. Extemporaneous composition; improvisation.

ex-tem'po-re, adv. Extemporaneously; without studied or special preparation; as, he spoke extempore. [< L. ex tempore; ex, from; tempore, abl. s. of tempus (tempor-), time.]

ex-tem'po-rize, l. eks-tem'po-ruiz; 2. ĕks-tĕm'po-rīz, v. ex-tem'po-rise, [-RIZED; -RIZ'ING.] I. t. To make or compose without preparation; provide offhand; do unpremeditatedly; as, to extemporize a shelter.

II. i. To speak or to compose and perform without premeditation; compose and deliver or perform a rhetorical or musical piece on the spur of the moment.

It was the custom for a poet, crowned at the capitol, to extemporize or recite in verse, upon every distinguished stage.
MRS. DE STAËL Corinne tr. by Isabel Hill, p. 29. [w. r. p.]

— ex-tem'po-ri-za'tion, -sa'tion, n. 1. The act or process of producing or delivering extemporaneously. 2. Any composition, especially a musical composition, produced extempore; improvisation. — ex-tem'po-riz'er or -ris'er, n. One who extemporizes.

ex-tend', l. eks-tĕnd'; 2. ĕks-tĕnd', v. I. t. 1. To make larger in space, time, or scope; carry out farther than the original point or limit; enlarge or lengthen the bounds or dimensions of; lengthen; widen; enlarge; prolong; as, to extend a railway; the government extended its territories; to extend a vacation. 2. To reach or stretch out; advance; put forth; as, he extended his hand; specif. (Physiol.), to stretch out or unbend: opposed to flex; as, the extensor indicus muscle extended his finger.

His other parts besides,
Prone on the flood, extended long and large,
Lay floating many a rood.
MILTON P. L. bk. i, l. 195.

3. To hold out for the acceptance of others; offer; grant; as, to extend a courtesy; he extends his forgiveness. 4.

Law. (1) To appraise at yearly value (lands or tenements belonging to one who has forfeited a recognizance). (2) To seize under a writ of extent. See EXTENT, 2. 5. To augment in quantity by additions of something different, as water to liquor. 6. [Rare.] To put forth the strength of (oneself). †7. To seize; take possession of. 8†. To extol. 9†. To plant. 10†. To survey.

II. i. 1. To reach in dimension, time, or scope; be continued; stretch; be prolonged; as, the Mississippi extends through several States; his power extends to other lands. 2. To stretch for a prize in a great speed; as racing horse. [< OF. extendre, < L. extendo, < ex, out, + tendo, stretch.] SYN.: see ADD; AMPLIFY; PROTRACT; SPREAD; STRETCH.—extend'ant, a. [Rare.] Outstretched; extending. 2. Her. Displayed.—extend'ed-ly, adv. In an extended manner.—extend'ed-ness, n. Extent.

extend'ed, 1 eks-tend'ed; 2 ɛks-tẽnd'ɛd, pa. 1. Covering or protracted over a great extent of time, space, or scope; extensive. 2. Having extension in space; occupying or pervading space. 3. Print. Broad in proportion to the height: said of type; as, an extended letter.

THIS IS EXTENDED TYPE.

4. Her. Displayed. extense't [Rare]; ex-tent'†.—extended order (Mil. & Naval), an open formation of individual ships or troops so as to present a more difficult target to the enemy's fire: opposed to close order.—extend'ed-ly, adv.

ex-tend'er, 1 eks-tend'er; 2 ɛks-tẽnd'ɛr, n. 1. One who or that which extends. 2†. A surveyor.

ex-tense', 1, 2 eks-tens'; 2 ɛks-tẽns', a. Extended; expansive.

ex-ten'si-bl(e², 1 eks-ten'si-bl; 2 ɛks-tẽn'si-bl, a. 1. Capable of extension or expansion. 2. Zool. Capable of being thrust out; exsertile; protrusile; as, the extensible tongue of the anteater. [F., < L. extensus; see EXTENSIVE.]—ex-ten'si-bil'i-ty, n.—ex-ten'si-bl(e-ness², n.

ex-ten'sile, 1 eks-ten'sil; 2 ɛks-tẽn'sil, a. Zool. Capable of being thrust out; exsertile; protrusile.

ex-ten'sil², pl. of extending or of extension; exsertile; extensible; protrusile. [< L. extensus; see EXTENSIVE.]

ex'ten-sim'i-ter, n. Same as EXTENSOMETER.

ex-ten'sion, 1 eks-ten'shən; 2 ɛks-tẽn'shon, n. 1. The act or process of extending, or the state of being extended: a reaching or stretching out in space, time, or scope; prolongation; enlargement; extent; increase of dimension; as, the extension of a boundary; an extension of the time.

The freedom of the American colonies, their union, their extension through the West, became the three objects of the remaining years of Franklin. BANCROFT United States vol. ii, p. 388. [A. 1883.]

2. That which is added in order to extend; an annex; addition; as, he built an extension to his stable. 3. Physics. That property of matter by virtue of which it occupies space, or has length, breadth, and thickness. 4. Com. The act of allowing to a debtor further time in which to pay a debt. This undertaking on the part of the creditor may be either verbal or written. 5. Law. Postponement of the time set for a legal procedure. 6. Surg. Traction of a fractured or dislocated limb in order to replace its parts. 7. Logic. (1) The capacity of a general concept to cover the specific classes or individual things connoted by it; the degree of applicability belonging to a notion. (2) All the things, collectively, which a term is predicable: opposed to intension. 8. Spatial continuation; mere distance or room without regard to any object in space; especially, in mathematics, the quality of being extended in one or more of the three dimensions of space; also, space regarded as having dimensions. 9. Physiol. The straightening of a limb, as opposed to flection. [< L. extensio(n-), < extensus; see EXTENSIVE.] ex-ten'sure†.

SYN.: see ACCRESCENCE; ADMEASUREMENT; ADDITION; APPENDAGE; BRANCH; INCREASE.

—ex-ten'sion-ap'pa-ra'tus, n. Surg. An appliance used in lengthening or straightening a fractured limb.—extension reach, n. Car-building. An adjustable reach or bar between the trucks of a logging-car.—university e., a system for extending the advantages of a university. Instruction beyond the limit of universities, by the establishment of lecture-courses and classes in or near populous centers.—ex-ten'sion-al, a. Extensive; having extension.—ex-ten'sion-al-ly, adv. Logic. Inclusively. See EXTENSION, 7.—ex-ten'sion-ist, n. An advocate of or a believer in extension, as of the territory of a state.

ex-ten'si-ty, 1 eks-ten'si-ti; 2 ɛks-tẽn'si-ti, n. 1. Psychol. An element of sensation from which, according to some authorities, perception of extension is derived. 2. The quality of extension; extensiveness. [< L. extensus; see EXTENSIVE.]

ex-ten'sive, 1 eks-ten'siv; 2 ɛx-tẽn'siv, a. 1. Extended ex-ten'sive,] widely in space, time, or scope; great; wide; as, extensive trade.

Mrs. Jellyby . . . has devoted herself to an extensive variety of public subjects at various times. DICKENS Bleak House p. 66. [A. A. 1886.]

2. Of or pertaining to extension. 3. Agr. Designating a method of cultivation in which the crop depends on the area treated rather than (as in intensive agriculture) on the fertilization and care of a restricted area. 4. Including the limit of the application, or logical extension, of a proposition, conception, or idea; as, the extensive quantity of a concept. 5†. Capable of being extended. [< LL. extensivus, < L. extendo, pp. extensus; see EXTEND.]—ex-ten'sive(o-ly, adv. 1. To a great extent; so as to be extensive; widely; as, he engaged extensively in speculation. 2. In relation to extension; as, an object extensively considered.—ex-ten'sive(o-ness², n. The state of being extensive. 2. Same as EXTENSITY. 3†. Extensibility.

ex'ten-som'e-ter, 1 eks'ten-som'i-ter; 2 ɛks'tẽn-sŏm'ɛ-tɛr, n. Same as MICROMETER by which to measure the expansion of a body, as a bar of metal. [< L. extensus (see EXTENSIVE) + -METER.]

ex-ten'sor, 1 eks-ten'sər or -sor; 2 ɛx-tẽn'sŏr, n. [LL.] Anat. A muscle that causes extension. See illus. under MUSCULAR SYSTEM.—extensor of the claw (Entom.), a footmuscle which is an extensor and helps pull the claw out.

ex-ten'sum, n. [Rare.] That which has extension in space.

ex-tent', 1 eks-tent'; 2 ɛks-tẽnt', st. & vi. [Sect.] To assess; be assessed.

ex-tent', n. 1. The dimension or degree to which anything is extended; sometimes, also, the object as being of a given dimension or degree; the limit to which anything reaches; size within given bounds; bulk; compass; reach; range; as, the extent of his power. 2. Law. (1) A writ directing the appraisal of lands at their yearly value, and their delivery to a creditor for a limited time to satisfy his claim. (2) A writ issued against the body, lands, and goods (a) of a crown debtor, called extent in chief; (b) of one indebted to a crown debtor, called extent in aid; also, a special writ against the lands and goods of a deceased crown debtor.

The noble Lord says that an extent must in three weeks arrest their property if parliament does not interpose. FOX in Goodhall's Trial, Eloquence, Land Audits p. 469. [n. 1887.]

3. Logic. Same as EXTENSION.

The extent of a notion originally and properly signifies the number of individuals to which it is applicable.

POWER Conjectures of Intellect p. 396. [s. 1808.]

4. Math. Any continuous magnitude. An extent of n dimensions is called an n extent. Thus, a surface is a 2-extent and an ordinary solid a 3-extent. 5. Ornith. Stretch of spread wings, from tip to tip across the backalar extent. 6†. An extending; meting out; distribution. 7†. Increase; augmentation. [< OF. extente, < L. extentus, pp. of extendo; see EXTEND.] ex-tend'ure†.

SYN.: see END; MAGNITUDE.—dual extents (Math.), two extents the sum of whose dimensions is less by unity than that of the space in which they exist, as a point and a line in a plane or a 2-extent and a 3-extent in 10-dimensional space.—immediate extent (Law), a writ of extent when issued without either scire facias or a commission of inquest.—locked extents (Math.), two extents whose relation is such that one extent higher in dimension can not be laid through either without cutting the other, thus being virtually locked, like two links of a chain.

ex-ten'u-ate, 1 eks-ten'yu-ət; 2 ɛks-tẽn'yu-ĕt, v. [-AT'ED; -AT'ING.] I. t. 1. To represent as less blameworthy than it might be; diminish the gravity or importance of; mitigate; palliate: said of something wrong or censurable.

Nothing can be more ridiculous, indeed, than the way in which we exaggerate each other's vices and extenuate our own. HAZLITT Works, Table Talk vol. i, p. 111. [A.]

2. [Rare.] To make thin or weak; attenuate. 3. [Rare.] To diminish in estimation; depreciate; detract from.

The question of his death is enrolled in the Capitol; his glory not extenuated, wherein he was worsted. SHAKESPEARE Julius Cæsar act iii, sc. 2.

II. i. [Rare.] To become slender or attenuated. [< L. extenuatus, pp. of extenuo, < ex, out, + tenuis, thin.] SYN.: see PALLIATE.—ex-ten'u-at(e², a. Thin; slender.—ex-ten'u-at'ing-ly, adv. In a manner to extenuate; so as to mimic or excuse.—ex-ten'u-a'tion, n. The act of extenuating, in any sense; palliation; excuse.—ex-ten'u-a-tiv(e, n. & a. Serving to extenuate; extenuating. II. n. An extenuating plea.—ex-ten'u-a'tor, n.—ex-ten'u-a-to'ry, a. Extenuative.

ex-ter', 1 eks-tûr'; 2 ɛks-tẽr', vt. [Rare.] To dig out of the earth. [< L. ex, out, + terra, earth.]

ex-ter'ior, 1 eks-tī'ri-or or -ər; 2 ɛks-tī'ri-or, a. 1. Situated outside of something else; beyond the limits; external; outlying; as, an exterior earthwork; objects exterior to the mind. 2. Forming the outer side (of); constituting or connected with the external part; as, the exterior side of a house; a beautiful exterior appearance. 3. Immediately and outwardly manifest; noted by the senses; visible; as, exterior virtues. 4. Acting or originating from without. 5. Zool. (1) Farthest from the axis; outer. (2) Anterior: said of a flower. 6. Astron. Having an orbit outside of the earth's: said of a planet. 7. Pertaining to foreign countries; foreign. [< F. extérieur, < L. exterior, compar. of externus, extra, outside, < ex, out.] ex-ter'ri-al†.—exterior of a simple closed curve, see CURVE.—ex-te'ri-o-ra'tion, n. Physiol. Mental reference of a sensation conveyed by a nerve to the peripheral part which it supplies, or to the object applied, as the feeling of pain in the dissevered part of an amputated limb due to irritation of nerves in the stump.—ex-te'ri-or-ly, n. [-TIES, pl.] 1. The exterior; the state of being exterior, especially the practise of ceremony rather than of inward virtues; superficiality; externality; as, exteriority in religion. 2. Something exterior; an external circumstance.

ex-te'ri-or, n. 1. That which is outside; the outer part, surface, or aspect; the external features; outside; as, the exterior of a building; an artistic exterior.

The exterior of Newick House was of a gray, but kindly stone, and presented a half-fortified and formidable appearance.

BULWER-LYTTON Last of the Barons p. 61. [n. a. s. 1867.]

2. Hence, the sum of outward qualities or traits; one's manner, dress, or deportment; one's outward conduct; as, a man of fine exterior.

Don't be deceived by a facile exterior. Tender men sometimes have strong wills. EMERSON Conduct of Life p. 14. [E. M. & CO. 1863.]

ex-te'ri-or-ize, 1 eks-tī'ri-o-rīz; 2 ɛks-tẽ'ri-o-rīz, vt. [-IZED; -IZ'ING.] To externalize. 2. Physics. To communicate to some external object: said of radioactivity.—ex-te'ri-o-ri-za'tion, n. Same as EXTERNALIZATION.—ex-te'ri-or-ly, adv.

Ex-ter'mi-nans, 1 eks-tûr'mi-nanz; 2 ɛks-tẽr'mi-năns, n. Bib. (Douai).

ex-ter'mi-nate, 1 eks-tûr'mi-nēt; 2 ɛks-tẽr'mi-nāt, vt. [-NAT'ED; -NAT'ING.] 1. To destroy entirely; extirpate; annihilate.

Every nation has a right to attack and exterminate them [pirates] without any declaration of war. KENT Commentaries vol. i, p. 184.

2. Alg. [Rare.] To eliminate (an unknown quantity). 3. [Rare.] To drive beyond the borders of a country; expel. Among the Athenians, whatever was the cause of a man's death, by failing upon him, was exterminated or cast out of the dominions of the republic. BLACKSTONE Commentaries p. 301. [< L. exterminatus, pp. of extermino, < ex, out, and see TERMINATE, 2.] ex-ter'mine†.

SYN.: annihilate, banish, destroy, eradicate, expel, extirpate, overthrow, remove, root out, uproot, wipe out. The word exterminate is applied to races of men or animals, and is now almost exclusively used for removal by death; individuals are now said to be banished, expelled. Deracinate is always applied to numbers or groups of plants which it is desired to remove effectually from the soil: a single tree may be uprooted. So he is not said to be eradicated who is to eradicate or root out noxious weeds. To extirpate is not only to destroy the individuals of any race of plants or animals, but the very stock, so that the race can never be restored: we speak of eradicating a disease, of extirpating a cancer, exterminating wild beasts or hostile tribes; we seek to eradicate or extirpate all vices and evils. See ABOLISH.—ANT. augment, beget, build up, cherish, colonize, develop, foster, increase, plant, populate, propagate, replenish, settle.—ex-ter'mi-na-bl(e², a.—ex-ter'mi-na-tiv(e², a. Tending or serving to exterminate. II. n. That which exterminates.—ex-ter'mi-na'tor, n.—ex-ter'mi-na-to-ry, a. Tending to exterminate; of or pertaining to extermination.

ex-ter'mi-na'tion, 1 eks-tûr'mi-nē'shən; 2 ɛks-tẽr'mi-nā'shon, n. The act or process of exterminating, in any sense; total destruction; annihilation; extirpation; eradication; in algebra, elimination; as, the extermination of the unknown quantity. [< LL. exterminatio(n-), < L. extermino; see EXTERMINATE.] ex'ter-min'ion†.

ex-tern', 1 eks-tûrn'; 2 ɛks-tẽrn', a. [Archaic.] Exterior.

ex-tern', n. 1. A pupil who does not live at the school he attends; a day-scholar.

The externes were gone home and the boarders quiet at their studies. CHARLOTTE BRONTË Villette p. 60. [A. 1853.]

2. A member of the house staff of a hospital, who does not reside in the institution. 3. The external part; exterior; the external. [< F. externe, outer, < L. externus, < ex, out.] ex-ter'ne',—ex'ter-nat',] eks'ter-nē';] ɛks'tẽr-nā'. n. [F.] A school or day-scholars.

ex-ter'nal, 1 eks-tûr'nal; 2 ɛks-tẽr'nal, a. 1. Situated or occurring outside of the subject; being on or relating to the exterior; visible from the outside; hence, often, superficial; as, external polish. 2. Belonging to the material or phenomenal world as distinguished from the mind that perceives it; objective.

No amount of mere external evidence can produce genuine faith. C. HODGE Way of Life p. 10. [A. s. s. u.]

3. Med. Relating to the surface of the body; as, an external disease, that is, a disease seated on the surface of the body and forming the object of surgical treatment. 4. Pertaining to or coming from foreign lands or people; foreign; as, external traffic. 5. Extraneous; extrinsic. 6. Anat. Further from the medial plane of the body. [< L. externus, < ex, out.]—external affairs (Austral. Const. Law), extraterritorial affairs within the control of the Commonwealth Parliament. These embrace the appointment of agents abroad, the promotion of Australian interests in other countries, and the extradition of fugitive offenders.—e. association, perception, etc., see ASSOCIATION, etc.—e. world, the world revealed to the mind through the senses: the world considered as existing independently of, yet interconnected with, our sense-perception; the material or objective world.—ex-ter'nal-ly, adv.

ex-ter'nal, n. Anything that is exterior or belonging to the outside; an exterior or outer part; specif., an outward symbol, rite, or ceremony, as of religion: chiefly plural.

Men had settled into a mood of externals, as if all religion consisted in these. Gentle Life Series of Christ p. 377. [A. 1888.]

ex-ter'nal-ism, 1 eks-tûr'nal-izm; 2 ɛks-tẽr'nal-ĭsm, n. 1. Philos. The doctrine that only things which are the objects of sense-perception exist, or that at least can be known to have it; phenomenalism. 2. Devotion to externals, especially in matters of religion, or an external part of religious worship or life.

He [Bunyan] found no pleasure in dressing, and an attachment almost idolatrous to the externalisms of religion.

W. M. PUNSHON Lectures and Sermons p. 105. [s. a. l.]

—ex-ter'nal-ist, n.—ex-ter'nal-is'tic, a. Pertaining to externalism.

ex'ter-nal'i-ty, 1 eks'tər-nal'i-ti; 2 ɛks'tẽr-nălĭ-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tiş, pl.] 1. Location on the outside, or in a place or on a surface; as, in Psychol. & Philos. Existence outside of the percipient mind, and in the world of physical phenomena; one of the objects of immediate external perception.

Some philosophers have labored hard to discover how the idea of externality—of something external—is first acquired.

JOS. ALDEN Elements of Intell. Philos. p. 35. [A. 1856.]

3. An external object, particularly an outward rite or symbol. 4. Regard for or devotion to externals; externalism.

ex-ter'nal-ize,] 1 eks-tûr'nal-ōiz; 2 ɛks-tẽr'nal-ĭz, vt. ex-ter'nal-ise,] [-IZED; -IZ'ING.] 1. To give shape to; embody. 2. To make external; confer external reality upon; conceive of and regard as external, as where a mere thought or conception is taken to be a sight or sound or other sense-percept, as the music of a dream. ex-ter'nal-i-za'tion,—ex-ter'nal-ist, n. 1. The act of making external or embodying. 2. The condition of being externalized; embodiment; manifestation. 3. Psychol. The mental process by which sensations are referred to objects outside the body, as distinguished from localization, or the process by which they are assigned position on the surface of, or within, the body. ex-ter'ni-a'tion†.

ex-ter'ni-ty, n. [Rare.] Outwardness; externality.

ex-ter'no-lat'er-al, 1 eks-tûr'no-lat'ər-al; 2 ɛks-tẽr'no-lăt'ɛr-al, a. On the exterior side.

ex-ter'no-me'di-an, 1 eks-tûr'no-mī'di-ən; 2 ɛks-tẽr'no-mē'di-an, a. Exterior to the median line, as of the wing of an insect. < L. externus (see EXTERN) + medius, middle.] ex-ter'no-me'di-al†.

ex'ter-na'ne-ous, a. [Rare.] Appertaining to or proceeding from some other country; foreign.

Ey'am, 1 ī'əm or ā'əm; 2 ā'am or ŷ'am, n. A village in N. Derbyshire, England; lead-mines; in the plague of 1665, 260 out of 350 persons died here.

ey'as, 1 ā'əs. Unfledged, or newly fledged.

cy'as, 1 ā'əs; 2 ŷ'as, n. A young hawk; also, in falconry, a hawk reared from the nest. [< NYAS, by reading a nyas as an nyas; WAR. < nide (< L. nidus, nest,] —ey'as-mus"ket†, n. A male nestling or sparrow-hawk: used as a child's pet name; dove; birdie.

Eyck, 1 ik; 2 ŷk, n. 1. Hubert van (1366–*a*1426), a Flemish painter; said to have invented oil-painting. 2. Jan van (13857–*a*1440), "John of Bruges"; a Flemish painter; brother of Hubert.

ey'dent, 1 ē'dənt; 2 ŷ'dĕnt, a. [Scot.] Diligent; industrious.

eye, 1 ī; 2 ŷ, n. [EYED; EY'ING or EYE'ING.] I. †. i. eye, v. To look at fixedly; watch closely or suspiciously; gaze at; scrutinize; as, the tiger eyes his prey.

Yet slow he laid his plaid aside,
And, lingering, eyed his lovely bride.
SCOTT Lady of the Lake can. 3, st. 22.

2. To make a hole in like the eye of a needle; as, to eye a bar, bolt, or needle.

II†. t. To have a particular look; appear.

eye†, n. 1. The organ of vision.

In vertebrates generally, the eye is a globular structure usually in a defined orbit or area of the skull, and consists of three coats or tunics and of three translucent refracting media enclosed by them. a. The structural details deviate little from those in man, viz.: (1) The first or outer coat consists of the sclerotic or white of the eye, to which the straight and oblique muscles are attached, and the transparent cornea. (2) The second or middle coat is highly pigmented, and consists of (a) the choroid, which has pupil: b, eyebrow; c, eyelid; f, mediately within and upon cornea, covering iris and pupil; the sclerotic by the ciliary processes; (b) the iris (of internal caruncle. which the pupil is the contractile aperture), which lies behind the cornea and gives the characteristic color to the eye. (3) The third or innermost coat is the delicate, translucent, colorless retina, in which the optic nerve-fibers terminate. The refracting media are: (1) the aqueous humor, a watery, slightly salty fluid which lies between the cornea and the crystalline lens, with the greater portion of its substance in front of the iris; (2) the crystalline lens, a biconvex, avascular, transparent body; and (3) the vitreous humor, a jelly-like translucent substance which lies behind the lens and fills the posterior and greater part of the eyeball. The eye has been compared to a camera; the black chorion serves to absorb surplus rays of light; the cornea and refracting media serve as a lens to focus the rays of light; and the retina serves as the sensitive plate on which the image is formed. The stimulation of the light on the minute rods and cones of the bacillary layer of the retina causes the transmission of the image to the brain by the optic nerve. In invertebrates eyes may be compound (made up of many ocelli), as in insects and crustaceans; or simple (consisting of one ocellus), as those, usually sight, in spiders; or diversiform, as in mollusks, some of which, as cuttlefishes, have complex eyes, or more eye-spots or eyespecks, as in some echinoderms or annelids. In all invertebrates the eyes originate in a different manner from those of vertebrates.

The Human Eye.

2. By metonymy, the socket in which that organ rests, or the iris or the pupil, its conspicuous parts; as, blue eyes; the eye of the cat expands in the dark; the eyes of the skeleton. 3. Ocular perception; sight; view; presence: usually in the plural; as, he hid himself from the eyes of the public.

The wreck is in his eye, and the roar of the surf and the shrieks of the drowning are in his ear.
GUTHRIE Gospel in Ezekiel p. 53. [n. DODS. 1859.]

4. Capacity for seeing, physically or mentally; ability to see or discern with appreciation or discrimination; range or acuteness of vision; as, he sees with an artist's eye.

Lowell . . . has always an eye for the comical and grotesque.
Edinburgh Review Oct., 1891, p. 380.

5. Attentive observation; watchful care; oversight; inspection; as, the eye of the public is upon them.

The Eye of a master will do more work than his hand.
B. FRANKLIN Poor Richard's Sayings, 1744 p. 149. [U. P. P. 1890.]

6. A particular look or expression; mien; as, an eye of pity, scorn, or favor; an angry eye.

He seemed to glance at me with an eye of pity.
HAWTHORNE Mosses, Mrs. Bullfrog p. 154. [n. M. & CO. 1851.]

7. Mental or moral vision, or way of viewing. (1) Estimation; mind; usually in the plural; as, error is criminal in the eyes of some. (2) Attentive regard; as, a strict eye to business. (3) Desire; inclination; as, a wistful eye.

Indignant Saldkof . . . is gradually edging back; always rather back, with an eye to his provisions, and to certain bogs and woods he knows of.
CARLYLE Frederick vol. vi, p. 38. [n.]

8. Anything that is shaped or placed so as to resemble the human organ of sight, or its socket. (1) A bud on a shoot or a tuber; as, an eye in a potato. (2) A round mark on a petal, or the center of a composite flower; as, the eye of the daisy; an eye in a pansy. (3) Ornith. & Entom. An ocellus (or color). (4) Conch. A scar of an adductor muscle, as of an oyster. (5) The center of a target; bull's-eye. (6) Arch. A central point or circular opening, as the middle of the lonle volute, and the central opening in the top of a dome. (7) A circular or roundish hole in a surface, especially if central. (8) One of the openings at the bottom of a brick-kiln, by which to fire it. (9) A small perforation; eyelet; as, the eye of a button or of a needle. (10) The central aperture in a millstone, through which the material passes to be ground. (11) A hole in any mechanical device, for the insertion of a handle, shaft, ring, or pin, etc., as in an ax, wheel, crank, or anchor-shank. (12) An opening in a blast-furnace, covered with glass or mica, for observing the contents of the furnace. (13) A wire loop or catch in which a dressmaker fastens; when concealed called blind eye.

Interior Structure of the Human Eye.

1. Muscles of the eye: a, superior oblique; b, superior rectus; c, internal rectus; d, optic nerve; e, external rectus; f, inferior rectus; g, inferior oblique; h, pulley for superior oblique; i, eyeball. 2. Longitudinal section of the eye: a, cartilage of the eyelid; b, upper eyelid; c, orbicularis muscle; d, external skin; e, iris; f, anterior chamber of eye; g, cornea; h, posterior chamber of eye; i, muscle of lens; j, lower eyelid; k, caruncula sac; l, conjunctiva; m, lens; n, vitreous humor; o, retina; p, choroid; q, sclerotica; r, optic nerve. 3. Iris and choroid with sclerotic turned back: a, pupil; b, iris; c, anterior half or choroid zone of d, ciliary nerves; e, outer surface of choroid; f, vasa vortiosæ; g, sclerotic; i, optic nerve.

The great law of eye and take runs through all nature, and if we see a hook, we may be sure that an eye is waiting for it.
LOWELL Higher Pantheism first series, viii, intro.

(14) The entrance to a mine-level from the pit. (15) A circular loop in a rope, shroud, etc. (16) The metal loop at the rear end of a trace, on a bridle, etc. (17) A socket for a carriage-spring. (18) Palæog. Same as AUGE. (19) Art. A peculiar loop-like interruption in the lines of drapery, observable in many pictures of the early German painters and others. (20) A calcareous concretion in the walls of the stomach of certain crustaceans.

9. That which resembles the eye as a central source of power, brilliancy, or influence; as, the eye of day; eye of a storm.

O! it was sweet, in the clear moonlight, . . .
To meet the thousand eyes of night.
THOMAS MOORE Culprit Fay st. 29.

10. Naut. An opposite or confronting direction or position; direct opposition; face; as, to sail in the eye of the wind.

Both strive to intercept and guide the wind;
And, in its eye, more closely they come back.
DRYDEN Annus Mirabilis st. 58.

11†. A slight tinge of color; tint. [ME. eye, pl. eyes, eyen, < AS. ége, pl. ségan; [ENGLISH.] cyghe†,—all in one's eye [Slang], imaginary.—black eye. 1. An eye with a black iris. 2. An eye having the adjacent surface discolored by a blow or bruise.—by the eye†, in great quantity.—cephalic eye, an organ of vision present in the head of pelecypod mollusks only when larval, but persistent in adult gastropods.—dorsal eye, one of the eyelike organs variously developed on the back of certain mollusks, as, especially, the chitons; a shell-eye.—eye agate, an agate formed of circular concentric layers, giving, when sliced, an eye-like appearance.—eye'an"i-mal'cule, n. A euglenoid flagellate infusorian with an eye-like colored spot, usually green.—eye'area, n. Decorative Art. A device which consists of the eye, eyelashes, and sometimes the cheek-fold.—eye'ball', n. Whale-bait.—eye-bath, n. Bot. The goldenseal or orangeroot.—eye-band, n. Naut. An iron band about a mast pierced with holes for various purposes.—eye-bar, n. A metal bar with a hole for a pin or bolt at one or both ends, used in bridges, etc.—eye-beam', n. A quick look or glance of the eye.—eye-bender, n. A machine for forming the eyes in eyebars, eye-bolts, etc.—eye-bitten†, a. Bewitched with the evil eye. II. n. A vesicating substance supposed to result from being bewitched by the evil eye.—eye-bitten†, a.—eye-bolt, n. Any of various forms of bolt, as a rivet, a screw, etc., having, in place of a head, an eye or ring to receive a rope, hook, or the like.—eye-bone, n. An ossification of the sclerotic coat in the eyeball of some animals, as birds; a scleroteal.—eye-box, n. A tube-like perforated box in a beach, intended to exhibit the height, and therefore the amount, of liquor in the leach.—eye-bree, n. [Scot.] An eyebrow.—eye-bridled, a. Bertillon System. Having or characterized by an epicanthus.—eye-bulb, n. The eyeball.—eye-cap, n. Entom. A tuft of hairs on the head of the antenna, shielding the eye, in Microlepidoptera.—eye-case, n. Entom. The part of a pupa that covers the eye.—eye-copy, n. A copy made without any mechanical aid to the eye.—eye-draft†,—eye-cup, n. A small cup, as of glass or metal, with rim curved to fit the eye, used in applying lotions; sometimes called eyeglass.—eye-defector, n. [Colloq.] An oculist.—eye-dot, n. One of the minute pigment-specks occurring in various invertebrates and supposed to be rudimentary visual organs.—eye-dotted, a. A graining-brush used in imitating bird's-eye maple.—eye-drop, n. [Archaic.] A tear.—eye-flap, n. A blinder on a horse's bridle.—eye-fly, n. Any midge or other minute fly which persistently gets into the eyes of unprotected animals.—eye-ful†, a. 1. Attracting the eye. 2. Observant.—eye-glutting, a. [Rare.] Satiating the eye.—eye-ground, n. The fundus of the eye.—eye-hem, n. Embroid. A curvilinear hem.—An eyepiece.—eye-like, a. Resembling eyes or eye-sockets, or situated similarly to them.

I looked . . . upon the mere bones, . . . upon the vacant eye-like windows . . . with an utter despondency of soul.
POE Tales, House of Usher p. 432. [A. & S. 1889.]

—eye-mark†, n. A thing gazed at; spectacle.—eye-memory, n. Recollection of the visual appearance of things.—eye of a bridge [Lr.], the span of a bridge.—eye of a volute (Arch.), the central circle of the volute.—eye of day [Poet.], the sun. eye of heaven†; eye of the morning†.—eye of the storm (Meteor.), an area of clear sky at the center of a cyclone.—eye-opener, n. Anything that opens the eyes, actually or figuratively. (1) An incredible tale or piece of news. (2) [Colloq.] Something enabling one to comprehend what was before a mystery or unheeded. (3) [Slang, U. S.] A drink of liquor, especially one taken early in the morning.—eye-pencil, n. A conventionalized representation of the eye, having the form of a pencil.—eye-pedicel, n. Zool. The stalk-like appendage supporting an eye in some crustaceans, snails, etc.; an eyestalk.—eye-pedunclet;—eye-pit, n. Zool. The socket of the eye, especially when the eye is sunken through loosening of the muscles.—eye-plate, n. Zool. The sclerite supporting the eyes in mites.—eye-point, n. An eye-spot.—eye-reach, n. The range of vision.—eye-ring, n. Optics. The central circular space where the clearest image and best results are obtained in using a lens-system.—eye-saint†, n. A person fascinating to the eye or regarded by reverences.—eye-salve, n. An ointment for the eyes; hence, anything that clears or strengthens mental vision.—eye-shade, n. A shade for the eyes.—eye-slit, n. An aperture to see through, as in a medieval helmet or in the combustower of a modern battleship.—eyes of the rigging (Naut.), the parts of the shrouds that overloop a masthead.—eye-speck, n. 1. A rudimentary eye; an eye-spot. 2. An imperfect eye.—eye-splice, n. Surg. An instrument for drawing back the lids during operations upon the eye.—eye-splice, n. Naut. A loop formed by bending back the end of a rope and splicing it into the rope.—eye-strain, n. Pathol. An affection caused by excessive or improper use of the eyes.—eye-string, n. A muscle or tendon that holds or moves the eye.—eye-sucker, n. A lerneoid crustacean (Lernæa sprattæ) found variable upon the eye of the sprat.—eye-tooth, n. One of the canine teeth of the upper jaw.—eye-trap, n. That which entraps through the eye.—eye-tube, n. The eye-piece of a telescope.—eye-tubercle, n. Zool. One of a pair of external protuberances over an eye, as in myodocopous ostracods.—eye-tumultus, n. An elevated heart about the eyes, characterizing some spiders.—eye-vengest, n. The wages that should be given to an eye-servant.—eye-waiter, n. An eye-servant.—eye-wash, n. A medicinal wash for the eye.—eye-water, n. 1. An eye-wash. 2. A humor of the eye. 3. [Slang.] Gin.—eye-wattle, n. Zool. A cutaneous excrescence about a bird's eye.—eye-wink, n. A wink; hence, a glance, suggestion, or hint.—eye-witness, n. [E. S.] An eyelash.—eye-wire, n. The metal frame of a spectacle lens.—eye-wise, a. [Rare.] 1. Seeing little except by the bodily eyes; lacking insight or mental vision. 2. Wise, as appearance goes.—eye-worm, n. A filaria which infests the human eye.—eye'wort", n. Same as EYEBRIGHT.—Flemish eye (Naut.), an eye formed by dividing the strands of a rope at the end.—half an eye, a small amount of mental eye (Conch.), a pigmented spot behind the velum in gastropod larvæ.—marginal eye (Zool.), one of the eyespots at the margin of the body, as in some turbellarian worms.—pallial eye (Conch.), an eyespot near the margin of the mantle of some bivalves, as the scallops.—parapineal eye (Zool.), a small body near the pineal eye in some of the lower vertebrates.—pineal eye (Zool.), the pineal body, which in certain reptiles reaches the surface and has the structure of an eye.—pseudocone eye (Entom.), an insect's eye in which there are four cells, usually filled with a transparent fluid, instead of a crystalline lens, as in most Diptera. See EUCONS.—rope-maker's eye, a double eye in the end of a rope or cable, formed by laying two of the strands into one eye, and the remaining one or two into another.—selenium eye, a device that resembles the eye in its sensitiveness to light, having a selenium resistance in place of the retina, and two slides for the lens.—shell eye (Zool.), an eye on a tentacle; specif., as in certain turbellarian worms.—the eyes of a ship, the foremost part of the bow: so called from the anciently prattled, while still obtains in parts of the Mediterranean and elsewhere, of painting a large eye on each side of a vessel's cutwater as an emblem to watch the evil eye.—the mind's eye, mental view or perception.—thermoscopic eye (Conch.), a pigmented organ in certain cephalopods, supposed to be sensitive to variations in temperature.—to have in one's eye, to intend or purpose.—to have or keep an eye on, to watch.—to lay or set eyes on, to see.—to make eyes at, to look fondly at; ogle. See also ELLIOT EYE.—to see between the eyes [Scot.], to clap the eyes on; to look at.—unpaired eye (Zool.), a median eye, as in certain invertebrates.—watery eye (Pathol.), epiphora.

eye', 1 ai; 2 ȳ, n. A brood, as of pheasants. [< NYE, by reading a nye as an eye; NYE, < OF. ni, < L. nidus, nest.]

eye', n. [Prov. Eng.] An islet; ait.

Eye, n. A market-town in Suffolk, England.

eye'a-bl(e', 1 ai'ə-bl; 2 ȳ'a-bl, a. [Eng.] Pleasant to the eye; passable.

eye'-bar", eye'beam", etc. See under EYE, n.

eye'bright", 1 ai'brait"; 2 ȳ'brit', n. 1. A low annual herb (Euphrasia officinalis) of the figwort family, with opposite leaves and spikes of bluish-white flowers: formerly in great repute for diseases of the eye.

Eyebright has a purple and white corolla, with a sprinkling of yellow on its odd lobe.
MCCOSH Typical Forms p. 159. [CON. & CO. 1856.]

2. Germander-speedwell. 3. Indian-pipe. 4. Indian tobacco. 5. Red pimpernel. 6. Round-leaved sundew. 7. Other species of Euphrasia, and several of Odontites.

eye'brow", 1 ai'brau"; 2 ȳ'brow", n. 1. The arch over the eye, the basis of which, in man, is the orbital inflection of the frontal bone; also, its covering, especially the hairs. See illus. under EYE1.

He [Ezekiel] puts his feet into the oven's mouth, places his right eyebrow up on his forehead, and begins a very pathetic lecture on the evils of poverty. WEBSTER in Private Correspondence vol. i, p. 155. [L. B. & CO. 1857.]

2. A mark over the eyes, as in a bird. 3. Arch. (1) A name occasionally applied to a fillet. (2) A window-cap. (3) In American usage, a low dormer window, with a curved top touching the roof at either end, suggesting by its lines the eye. 4. Naut. A wriggle. [< AS. ēagenbrēgh, < ēage, eye, + brǣwe, brow.]—eye'brow pen"cil, n. Theat. A cosmetic stick for coloring the eyebrows, etc.

eye'-case', eye-copy, eye-cup. See under EYE, n.

eyed, 1 aid; 2 ȳd, a. 1. Having eyes: often in composition; as, evil-eyed; tender-eyed; Argus-eyed. 2. Having eye-like spots, as the peacock's tail; ocellated.

eye'-glass", 1 ai'-glas"; 2 ȳ'-gläs', n. 1. pl. A pair of lenses resembling spectacles without bows, formerly held by the hand, but now usually kept in place by the tension of a spring; a pince-nez: frequently in the plural. 2. A lens of glass in a horn frame, used by watchmakers and engravers, or any lens used to assist vision, as a monocle. 3. The glass nearest the eye in a telescope or microscope; an eyepiece. 4. An eye-cup. 5†. The crystalline lens.

eye'hole", 1 ai'hōl"; 2 ȳ'hōl', n. 1. A round opening through which to pass a pin, hook, rope, or the like. 2. A hole or crevice through which one may look; peephole.

eye'lash", 1 ai'lash"; 2 ȳ'lash', n. One of the stiff curved hairs growing from the edge of the eyelids, or the line of hairs collectively.

For the sharp eyelash, like a sabre, speaks
The martial law of Passion.
BAYARD TAYLOR Temptation of Hassan Ben Khaled st. 9.

eye'less, 1 ai'les; 2 ȳ'lės, a. Lacking eyes; deprived of sight.

Slow as an eyeless man who gropes his way.
R. BUCHANAN Pygmalion the Sculptor st. 1.

eye'let, 1 ai'let; 2 ȳ'lėt, n. 1. A small hole or opening; a little eye or aperture; specif., a hole made in canvas, leather, paper, or the like, either bushed with metal or worked around with buttonhole-stitch.

It [the Golden Gate] is a mere eyelet—a strait giving access to a wide extension of bay.
W. H. BISHOP Old Mexico p. 266. [H. 1883.]

2. A metal ring for protecting such a perforation. eye'let-ring", 3. Entom. (1) An ocellus or little eye. (2) A small eye-like spot.

[< F. œillet, dim. of œil, eye, < L. oculus, eye.]—eye'let-hole", n. A hole made for or serving as an eyelet; an eyelet. —eye'let-ma"chine, n. A sewing-machine for making eyelets, covering rings, and doing similar work.—e.-set, n. A punch for setting and clinching eyelets.—e.-stitch, n. The buttonhole-like stitch made by an eyelet-machine.—eye'let, vt. To make eyelets in.—eye'let-eer', n. An instrument for making eyelet-holes; a stiletto.

eye'lid", 1 ai'lid'; 2 ȳ'lid', n. One of the curtains of loose integument, movable at will, that cover the eyeballs in front. See illus. under EYE1.

eye'-mind"ed, 1 ai'-mind'ed; 2 ȳ'-mind'ed, a. Psychol. Having a marked tendency to the employment of visual images in all mental processes: applied especially to those who think in terms of the written or printed rather than of the spoken language. —eye'-mind"ed-ness, n.

Through letters the person becomes eye-minded.
W. T. HARRIS in Sci. Side-Lights p. 767. [P. & W. '03.]

Roman. Black Letter. Script.

F, f, 1 ef; 2 ēf, n. [EFS, F's, or Fs, 1 efs; 2 ēfs, pl.] 1. A letter: the sixth in the English alphabet. Its sound, technically called a 'labiodental voiceless spirant,' is produced by bringing the lower lip into loose contact with the upper teeth, the vocal cords being inactive. With the cords vibrating the sound becomes v. Being the result of an imperfect closure, which permits a gradual escape of the vocal current, f and v belong to the class of non-explosive or continuable consonants. This is expressed by the name 'spirant.'

Final f is needlessly doubled after a short vowel, except in of. In af it has the sound of v. When brought by inflection before voiced s it changes to v; cf. leaf, leaves. The sound of f is often denoted by ph, and in a few words by gh. The ph words are mainly of Greek-Latin origin. When the Romans began to borrow Greek words, they used ph to transcribe the Greek θ, which was a blended voiceless aspirate. Its sound was not at first identical with that of Latin f, but became identical with it in the course of time. To a greater or less extent, the modern languages that have borrowed from the Latin have substituted ph for the church ph. In Italian and Spanish the change has been carried out consistently, philosophus, for example, being spelled filosofo. In English it has prevailed. See pain, fantastic, frenzy, and a few other words, and spelling-reformers advocate the further substitution of f for ph. The words in which the f sound is denoted by gh are of German origin (laugh, rough, etc.), and the gh represents an earlier guttural spirant, like the German and Scotch ch, which became labial.

The continuous labiodentals, f, v, average the following percentages in English literature, 2.06 + 2.37, while the mute labials p, b, average 1.71 + 1.04. WHITNEY Oriental and Ling. Studies second series, p. 274, [n. 1874.]

F is the first letter in the Anglo-Saxon runic futhorc, the sixth in the Latin and Phenician alphabets. Capital F is from Latin and Greek F, < Old Greek ϝ, Ϝ, having the sound of w, which the Romans represented by the same sign as the vowel u, < Phenician ו, < hieratic 𓏲 < hieroglyph 𓆑. From F come cursive and script f. The black letters are monkish fancies. For dates, see A. The hieroglyph is a picture of a horned asp. The Phenician letter is called waw or vau, peg or hook; the Greek is called digamma from a fanciful resemblance to two united gammas (Γ), or G's, one above the other; ef, is the Latin name.

The history of the characters may be shown as follows:

Hieroglyphic Asp. | Egyptian Phenetic. | Phenetic Hieratic. | Early Greek. | Roman. | English Script.

[L., < factus, pp. of facio, make.] fac'tory. SYN.: see AGENT.—association factor, n. Chem. In a given solution, a factor defining the extent of the formation of complex molecular aggregates.—domestic f., a factor residing in the same country with his principal.—f. of evaporation (Thermodynamics), the ratio of the heat in one pound of steam at a certain pressure, computed from the temperature of the water-supply to the latent heat of evaporation at the boiling-point.—f. of horse-power, the horse-power developed in an engine of given piston-area and rate of piston-speed by one pound mean effective pressure per square inch.—f. of safety (Mech.), the ratio of the breaking stress to the probable greatest stress likely to be applied to any structure.—factors of a locality (Forestry), the conditions which influence the forest-growth of a specific region, as slope, soil, outlook, rainfall, etc.—form-f., n. Elec. The ratio between the effective and average values of an alternating current. 2. Forestry. The ratio, expressed decimally, between the volume of a tree, or portion of a tree, and of a cylinder of the same height and diameter. The volume of this cylinder multiplied by the form-factor gives the actual volume of the tree or portion of the tree. A form-factor is called absolute when the diameter of the tree is measured at any convenient height, the form-factor referring only to that portion of the tree above the point at which the diameter is measured; normal, when the diameter is measured at a height in constant ratio to the total height of the tree; artificial, when the breast-high diameter is measured. Cyrenius Pinchot Trans. Am. Soc. Agr. Engineers, U. S. Dept. of Agr., Bulletin No. 61. [GOV. PTG. OFF. 1905.]—heat-f., n. [Rare.] Same as ENTROPY.—imbalancing f., a disturbing force in a mechanism.—impedance-f., n. Elec. The ratio of the impedance or apparent resistance of a circuit to its ohmic resistance.—inductance-f., n. Elec. In an alternating-current circuit, the ratio of the wattless or reactive current to the total current.—integrating f., an expression which, when it multiplies a function of differentials, makes it an exact differential.—judicial f. (Scots Law), an administrator or steward appointed by the court over an estate in legal custody.—lag-f, n. Elec. Same as POWER FACTOR.—liquefaction-f., n. Steamengin. A factor representing condensation, which gives the whole steam consumption when multiplied by the weight of indicated.—load-f., n. 1. The ratio between the average power for a specified time and the maximum power used during the same time, as applied to machines, power-plants, etc. The ratio of the average power to the full rated power in such machines, etc. 3. Elec. In systems of electric distribution, the ratio of the average load in the system to the maximum load carried during the day.—power-f., n. Elec. Of an alternating current, the quotient of the true power divided by the apparent power.—prime f., a factor that is a prime number or quantity.—reactive f., the sine of the angle of phase-displacement between the current in an alternating-current circuit and the electromotive force. It is equal to the ratio of the wattless to the total current in the circuit.—spherical-resolution f. (Photom.), a numerical factor for calculating the mean spherical intensity of a source of light from the intensity of the light cast in a particular direction.—unbalancing f., the greatest amount of excess or shortage of power over the mean power that takes place in a single revolution of an engine.—fac-tor'a-bi(e), a. Capable of being resolved into factors. —fac'tor-age, n. 1. The compensation allowed to a factor for his services; commission. 2. The conduct of a factor's business.—fac'tor-ess, n. A female factor. fac'tress†.

fac'tored, 1 fak'tard or -tord; 2 fāc'tord, pa. 1. Made fac'tord, 1 in quantity by machinery in a factory, as distinguished from handmade or custom. 2. Procured on commission, or in the way of trade; specif. [Eng.], in the Birmingham and Sheffield hardware business, procured and stamped with the purchaser's trade-mark.

fac-to'ri-al, 1 fak-tō'ri-al; 2 fāc-tō'ri-al, a. 1. Math. Pertaining to a factor or a factorial. 2. Of or pertaining to factor or a factory. —factorial (Math.), the product of the periodicity of the function $F(x+w) = CFx$, C being a constant.

fac-to'ri-al, n. Math. A continued product of factors differing by unity, or of functions of quantities so differing; especially, the continued product, 1. 2. 3. . . . n.

It is symbolized thus: $n!$ or $\lfloor n$, the last number of the product being written. Thus, 4! or $\lfloor 4$ (read factorial four) $= 1 \times 2 \times 3 \times 4 = 24$.

fac'tor-ize, 1 fak'tor-iz; 1 fāc'tor-iz, v. [-IZED; -IZ'ING.] Law. I. t. 1. [Local, New Eng.] To garnishee. 2. Math. To convert into factors.

fac"ul-tize, 1 fak'ul-tiz; 2 fāc'ul-tīz, vt. [-TIZED; -TIZ'ING.] To equip with capacity; endow with practical ability.

fac"ul-ty, 1 fak'ul-ti; 2 fāc'ul-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tiz, pl.] 1. Any mode of action or behavior regarded as implying a natural endowment or acquired power. Specif.: (1) Any form of natural activity, or intentional doing, especially of the mind; as, the faculties of seeing, feeling, reasoning.

We use the term faculty to express the different modes of the mind's action. LORD KAMES Introd. Philos. p. 21. [A. 1866.]

(2) Any special form of skill, or unusual ability, whether natural or acquired; knack; turn; native facility; improperly and rarely, a specific efficiency or power of action in an inanimate thing; as, the faculty of observation or imitation: a faculty for doing two things at once, etc.; the faculty of a lever.

2. Psychol. One of the native complex capacities or powers into which the older psychology analyzed and to which were ascribed the phenomena of conscious mental life; as, the faculty of perception, memory, thought, etc.

Altho the so-called faculty psychology (see PSYCHOLOGY) seldom or never considered the division into faculties self-explanatory and violated the unity of mental life, it probably did more to direct attention to more profound analysis and more scientific explanation by discovery of the real causes and laws of mental phenomena. For these reasons those psychologists who still employ the term faculty are careful to restrict it to its less metaphysical and more common-sense meaning.

By the so-called faculties of mind, therefore, scientific psychology can, at most, only mean to indicate the different modes of behavior . . . of the one subject of all psychical states.

G. T. LADD Psychol. Desc. & Ex. p. 51.

Faculty is properly limited to the endowments which are natural to man and universal with the race.

faith†, v. To believe; give credence to; credit.

faith, 1 fāth; 2 fāth, n. 1. A firm conviction of the truth of what is declared by another by way either of testimony or authority, without direct evidence; belief in what another states, affirms, or testifies, simply on the ground of his truth or veracity; especially (as distinguished from mere belief), practical dependence on a person, statement, or thing as trustworthy; fides, as opposed to merely intellectual belief; trust; as, faith in a friend (as sincere and true); faith in his advice (as wise and good); faith in his efforts (as likely to be efficacious). 2. Specifically, in theology: (1) Firm belief in and understanding to the truth of what God has revealed; belief in the testimony of God as contained in the Scriptures. (2) A divinely wrought, loving, and hearty reliance upon God and His promises of salvation through Christ, or upon the Christian religion as revealing the grace of God in Christ: sometimes called justifying or saving faith; as, we are saved through faith.

The distinguishing characteristic of true saving faith is faith. C. HODGE Systematic Theology vol. iii, pt. iii, ch. 13, p. xli. [s. 1873.]

(3) More widely, operative belief in the truths of religion; practical realization of the power and excellence of Christian doctrine; as, a serene and blessed faith.

Faith . . . is that personal attitude by which divine revelation is subjectively appropriated. . . . In general it may be said that faith exists in modern Christendom in the form most on the following points: (1) Faith does not originate from logical proceedings from an immediate experience. (2) It is not a human achievement and not the acknowledgment of a human authority, but an effect of God through his revelation. (3) The essence in the sense of conviction of the truth-knowledge of faith can not be separated from fiducia. (4) Trust in salvation presupposes an awakened knowledge of sin and the desire for emancipation. (5) The moral life of the Christian has as its basis the forgiveness of sins, which has been received in faith. New Schaff-Herzog Encyc. of Rel. Knowl. vol. iv, p. 2265. [c. 1891.]

3. Intellectual conviction in general, on whatever based, including even an approach to absolute knowledge; as, faith in Herodotus; faith in the nebular hypothesis; faith in a mathematical demonstration; axioms of Philos. More specifically, the instinctive confidences which reason has in its own fundamental assumptions and forms of procedure; the element of conviction or belief which enters into all knowledge, and enters into every exercise of critical and skeptical thinking, however agnostic its conclusion. 5. A doctrine or system of doctrines, or a proposition or set of propositions, that one holds to be true; specif., a religious creed or article of belief; as, the Lutheran faith; a man's political faith.

'Tis not the dying for a faith that's so hard, Master Harry, . . . 'tis the living up to it that's difficult.
THACKERAY Henry Esmond bk. i, ch. 6, p. 42. [r.]

6. An obligation to fidelity, whether expressed or implied; also, the observance of this obligation; unwavering adherence to principle, especially in one's relations to others; fidelity; loyalty; as, to keep (or break) faith with an ally; the mutual faith of brothers.

The self-sacrifice of Leonidas, the good faith of Regulus, are the glories of history.
J. LUBBOCK Pleasures of Life pt. ii, ch. 1, p. 11. [MACM. 1889.]

7. [Rare.] The character of deserving belief or trust; good credit; credibility; reliability; as, the faith of history. [< OF. feid, < L. fides, < fido, trust.] fayth†.

SYN.: assent, assurance, belief, confidence, conviction, credence, credit, creed, assertion, opinion, reliance, trust. We give credence to a report, assent to a proposition or to a proposal. Belief is stronger than credence; credence might be described as prima facie belief. We speak of giving credence to a report, but not of giving belief. Goods are sold on credit; we give one credit for good intentions. Conviction is a belief established by argument or evidence; assurance is belief beyond the reach of argument; as, the Christian's assurance of salvation. An opinion is a general conclusion held as probable, the without full certainty; a persuasion is a more confident opinion, involving the heart as well as the intellect. In religion, a doctrine is a statement of belief regarding a single point; a creed is a summary statement of doctrines. Confidence is a firm dependence upon a statement as true, or upon a person as worthy. We have a calm reliance upon the uniformity of nature; we have trust or faith in God. Faith is a union of belief and trust. Faith is chiefly personal: belief may be quite impersonal. We speak of belief of a proposition, faith in a promise, because the promise emanates from a person. But belief in a person is often used with no appreciable difference from faith in a person. It is common to distinguish between intellectual belief of religious truth, as any other truth might be believed, and belief of the heart, or saving faith. ANT.: see primary.— ANT.: denial, disavowal, disbelief, dissent, distrust, doubt, misgiving, rejection, skepticism, suspicion, unbelief.— PREP.: faith in God; the faith of the gospel.

3. Truthful; worthy of belief or confidence; as, a faithful witness; a faithful saying. 4. Full of faith; strong or firm in faith; as, faithful convictions. SYN.: devoted, firm, incorruptible, loyal, staunch, sure, true, trusty, unwavering. A person is faithful who will keep faith, whether with or without power to aid or serve; a person or thing is trusty that possesses such qualities as to justify the fullest confidence and dependence. We may speak of a faithful but feeble friend; we say a trusty agent, a trusty steed, a trusty sword.— ANT.: capricious, faithless, false, fickle, unfaithful, untrue, untrustworthy, wavering.— PREP.: faithful in service; to duty, to command; toward one; toward one's faithfulness.— the faithful, 1. In the early church, saints or believers; Christians. 2. In the Roman and Anglican churches, such as are in full communion. 3. In Mohammedanism, believers in Mohammed. 4. Political or other partizans whose support can be counted on.— faith'ful-ly, adv. In a faithful manner; loyally; sincerely; truly.— faith'ful-ness, n. The quality of being faithful; fidelity; loyalty; constancy.

fal-la'cious, } fa-lē'shus; 2 fă-lā'shŭs, a. Of, pertaining fal-la'cial, } to, embodying, or involving a fallacy; deceptive, as in quality or appearance; illogical; sophistical; misleading; delusive; as, a fallacious conclusion. [< LL. fallaciosus, < fallacia; see FALLACY.] — -ly, adv. — -ness, n.

fal'la-cy, 1 fal'ə-sı; 2 făl'a-cy, n. [-CIES, 1 -sız; 2 -şis, pl.] 1. Anything that misleads or deceives the mind or the eye; also, deceptive or misleading quality, nature, or appearance; deceitfulness; mistake. 2. Logic. Any unsound or delusive mode of reasoning, or anything based on such reasoning.

Fallacies are either in induction or deduction. Fallacies in induction include (1) those from failure to observe exactly, as by neglect, incompleteness, or mixture of illegitimate inference with fact, and (2) those from incorrect interpretation, as in (a) confounding induction with mere generalization, (b) the assumption of an improper or insufficient cause, (c) neglect of a real for a hypothetical cause, (d) assuming what is not a cause to be a cause (unreal reason, or non causa pro causa, including the errors of post hoc ergo propter hoc and cum hoc ergo propter hoc), and (e) assuming unverified hypotheses as truth. Fallacies in deduction are either material, formal, or semi-logical. (1) Material or real fallacies may consist (a) in unwarranted assumption of premises, as in begging the question, or (b) in irrelevant conclusion from proper premises, as in arguing to the wrong point (ignoratio elenchi) or as in simple confusion of thought. (2) Formal or logical fallacies are those that occur in the mere form of the statement and have nothing to do with the subject-matter. (3) Semi-logical fallacies are partly material and partly formal, and include (a) equivocation, the use of a word in two senses; (b) amphibology, ambiguous grammatical construction; (c) fallacy in composition and division, the use of a term distributively in one premise and collectively in the other; and (d) fallacy in etymology, ambiguity from derivation.

Darwinism, like all widely popular and widely mischievous fallacies, has many a curious gleam and grain of truth in its tissue.

fan'ci-er, 1 fan'si-er; 2 făn'ci-er, n. 1. One who breeds or buys and sells birds and animals, and is familiar with their habits and ways; one having a taste for or interest in special objects; an amateur; as, a dog-fancier; a fancier of relics. 2. A visionary; a dreamer. 3. [Rare.] A designer of ornaments.

fan'ci-ful, 1 fan'si-ful; 2 făn'ci-ful, a. 1. Proceeding from or produced by fancy; ideal; odd; hence, dictated or suggested by fancy; as, a fanciful costume; fanciful ideas. 2. Existing only in the fancy; baseless; unreal; whimsical; as, fanciful distinctions.

Fanciful . . . is a relative term; what is solid in one field of study may seem fanciful in another.
LINDON Bampton Lectures p. 71. [n. s. w. 1869.]

3. Given to the indulgence of fancy; moved or led by the influence of fancy; specif., given to fancy as distinguished from imagination. See IMAGINATION.

Milton had a highly imaginative, Cowley a very fanciful mind.
COLERIDGE Works, Biog. Literaria in vol. iii, p. 202. [n. 1858.]

SYN.: chimerical, fantastic, grotesque, imaginative, visionary. That is fanciful which is dictated or suggested by fancy independently of more serious considerations; the fantastic is the fanciful with the added elements of whimsicalness and extravagance. The fanciful swings away from the real or the ordinary lightly and pleasantly, the fantastic extravagantly, the grotesque ridiculously. A fanciful arrangement of objects is commonly pleasing, a fantastic arrangement is striking, a grotesque arrangement is laughable. A fanciful theory or suggestion may be decently recognized as such; a visionary scheme is erroneously supposed to have a basis in fact. See DREARY; IDEAL; IMAGINARY.— ANT.: accurate, actual, authentic, commonplace, matter-of-fact, ordinary, real, reasonable, regular, sensible, solid, sound, sure, true.— -ly, adv. — -ness, n. [agnative.

fan'cy, n. [-CIES, 1 -sīz; 2 -cīs, pl.] 1. The power or act of forming pleasing, graceful, whimsical, or odd mental images, or of combining them with little regard to rational processes of construction; imagination in its lower form; hence, in former usage, the reimaging faculty of the mind; fantasy; often specif., phantasy.

The present use of the word fancy is literary rather than psychological. Fantasy has largely taken its place as a name for the reimaging power, especially in the narrow sense. It is oftenest used as synonymous with imagination in its lower form as the picturing power, exercised, however, with less regard for the conditions and laws which control the combinations of things and events in reality, or for the operations of mind in accordance with the principles of rational procedure. Formerly it was commonly confounded with the creative power of conception or mental construction, scientific, artistic, and practical; but since the criticisms of Wordsworth and Coleridge the tendency has been to distinguish it carefully from the higher powers and processes and to confine it to its proper literary uses. See IMAGINATION; CONSTRUCTION; FANTASY.

2. Any product of the exercise of this faculty; an imaginary notion, representation, or image; whimsical notion; vagary; as, the fancies of youth; a pleasing fancy.

GEO. MACDONALD Robert Falconer p. 266. [n. 1868.]

3. A baseless or visionary idea; notion; impression; as, he had a fancy there was treasure buried on his land. 4. A liking or fondness, as if resulting from caprice; preference, or the object toward which it is directed; as, a fancy for botany; the gratification of a fancy. 5. A pet pursuit; an object sought after to gratify the taste or a whim without regard to utility; a hobby; fad. 6. A roller on a carding-engine which acts as a brush to raise the fibers out of the teeth, to make it more ready for the doffer. 7. Hort. A plant with variegated flowers; also, a flower of such a plant. 8. [Archaic.] Taste exhibited in production; artistic invention; design; as, the edifice showed a refined fancy. 9. [Archaic.] A short piece of music without words. 10†. An aglet. 11†. Fantasticalness. [< F. fantaisie, < LL. phantasia, < Gr. phantasia, < phainō, show.]

SYN.: belief, caprice, conception, conception, desire, humor, idea, image, imagination, inclination, liking, mood, predilection, supposition, vagary, whim. An intellectual fancy is a mental image or picture formed upon or with no mimetical association or resemblance; a conceit has less of the picturesque and more of the theoretic than a fancy; a conceit is sometimes aside from the common laws of reasoning, as a fancy is lighter and more airy than the common mode of thought. A conceit or fancy may be wholly unfounded, while a conception has always some answering reality. See CONCEPTION. An intellectual fancy or conceit may be pleasing or amusing, but is never worth serious discussion; we speak of a mere fancy, a droll or odd conceit. A personal fancy is a capricious liking formed with slight reason and no exercise of judgment, and liable to fade as lightly as it was formed. In a broader sense, the fancy signifies the faculty by which fancies are formed. See DREARY; IDEA; IMAGINATION.— ANT.: actuality, certainty, fact, reality, truth, verity.

fault, n. 1. A slight offense; failure; negligence; a neglect of duty or propriety, resulting from inattention or lack of prudence rather than from design; an injury or offend, but liable to censure or objection; as, he acknowledged his fault. 2. Whatever impairs excellence; an imperfection or defect in a person or thing; blemish; as, what are the faults of this picture? 3. Mining. (1) A dislocation of a stratum or vein which breaks its continuity. (2) In coal seams, a slate or rock intrusion rendering the vein locally valueless; as, slate fault, clay fault, etc. 4. A missing or losing of the trail or scent: said of hunting-dogs. 5. Geol. A dislocation, relatively to each other, of the rock-masses on opposite sides of a fracture.

Faults.

The plane of fracture (faut-plane) is rarely vertical: its angle of inclination from a vertical plane pi, a normal fault; fk, a reversed or is called the hade, thrust fault; ph, a lateral scarp; angles The side which is left fde and cab are the hades of the faults; relatively higher is angles dfe and cab are also called dip; dc throw the heaved or upthrow of fault pi, and ab of fault fk; ef, heave or throw. In an respect to fault fk; with respect to fault inclined fault the up- block a is on the upthrow side and lower side of the fissure block 2 on the downthrow side; a vertical is the hanging wall, tical boring at m would apparently the lower is the foot passes two ore beds, really only one bed wall. The direction n, duplicated by the thrust fault. of a horizontal line in the fault-plane is the strike, that of the intersection of the fault-plane with the surface is the trend. The throw is the amount of vertical displacement, the horizontal displacement perpendicular to the strike is the heave, that parallel to the strike is the displacement. A fault without vertical displacement is a horizontal fault. In stratified rocks, faults in which the strikes approximately coincide with, or are perpendicular to, or are oblique to the strike of the series are called respectively strike, dip, and oblique faults. Dip and oblique faults are often called cross-faults.

6. Elec. An accidental leak in an electric circuit by reason of a disconnection, but of a direct or an exact. 7. Lawn-tennis, etc. A failure by the server to drive the ball into the proper part of his opponent's court. 8†. Default; lack. 9†. Censure; blame. [< OF. faute, < L. falta, deceive.] Syn.: see MISTAKE; OFFENSE. — at fault. 1. In the wrong. 2. Worthy of blame. 3. Off the scent. 4. Hence, at a loss; in a quandary. — fault'-block, n. Geol. A rock-mass displaced by faulting. — f.-escarpment, n. Geol. A cliff consisting of the upthrow side of a fault. — f.-line, n. A line along which faulting has occurred: also, the trace of a fault-plane on the surface of the earth. — f.-plane, n. The fracture along which faulting occurs, rarely a mathematical plane, commonly a curved surface. — f.-rock, n. The fragmentary rock, often recemented, formed as a fault-fissure by the crushing and grinding of the walls during faulting. f.-breccia†. — f.-scarp, n. An escarpment along the line of and caused by a fault. f.-escarpment. — f.-vein, n. A vein filling a fault-fissure. — f.-vent, n. A volcanic vent coinciding with a fault. — for f. of, in default of. — in fault, blameworthy. — normal f., an inclined fault with the hanging wall on the downthrow side. — reversed f., an inclined fault with the hanging wall on the upthrow side. — thrust-f., n. Geol. A fault caused by compression of the strata, which thereafter occupy less horizontal space than before, the hade being toward the upthrow: the most common form of fault. over-thrust-f., — to a f., exceedingly; excessively; as, generous to a fault. — to find f., to discover or make known something blameworthy, especially in a censorious spirit: often followed by with. — with all faults (Com.), without guaranteeing freedom from faults. — without f., without fail; sure. — fault'age, n. Geol. Existence or effect of faulting. — fault'ful, a. — fault'ful-ly, adv. — fault'wor"thy, a. [Rare.] Blameworthy.

fault'er, n. One who is at fault or censurable. fau'ter†.

fault'find"er, 1 fôlt'faind"er; 2 fąlt'fīnd"ẽr, n. 1. One given to finding fault. 2. A mechanical contrivance for detecting faults in an electric current. — fault'find"ing, a. & n.

fault'less, 1 fôlt'les; 2 fąlt'lẽs, a. Without fault.

Byron rarely wrote anything either worthless or faultless.

Faust, 1 foust; 2 fąust, n. 1. Johann, see FIST. 2. Johann, a German physician, alchemist, astrologer, and reputed magician of the 16th century; subject of the Historia von Dr. Johann Faustien (1587), or Marlowe's The Tragical History of Dr. Faustus (1588), of Spies' (1790), and Goethe's and Marlowe's opera Faust (1859). In Marlowe's tragedy, Faustus is a young scholarly magician who sells his soul to the devil in exchange for earthly glory and sensual pleasures, but is overcome with remorse and agony when the payment of the forfeit has to be made. In Goethe's drama, Mephistopheles (the devil) boasts before heaven that he can lower man to the level of the brute, and God replies that man's better nature can conquer all temptation. Faust, an elderly student, weary of life's puzzles, is chosen for the trial, and thus tyrnes humanity, mindand tempted, but finally adhering to the right. Faust is hurried to a life of pleasure, and carried away by passion he betrays and then abandons Margaret, who in despair slays their child, and expires in prison repenting of her sin. Faust is carried off from the prison by Mephistopheles, and thus ends the first part of the drama. The second part is filled with allegory and symbolism. Continuing a life of pleasure, Faust marries the Grecian Helen, a vague symbol of the union of the romantic and classical schools, and the action of the drama closes with the lesson that neither learning, lust, nor pleasure can satisfy the heart of man, whose happiness consists in leading a useful life and thus escaping the snares and power of Mephistopheles. Faus'tus†.

feath'er, n. I. One of the appendages peculiar to and growing out from the skin of a bird, collectively forming the plumage; as, a bird of a feather; down feather.

A typical feather is composed of a lower hollow horny stem (the calamus, quill, or barrel), which passes into a four-sided shaft (the rachis), filled with pith. The rachis bears on each side laterally flexible linear plates, or barbs, which in turn bear barbules that by means of lateral serrations or little hooks interlock with the opposed barbules. In the smaller and less remote barbs the barbs are more soft and free from one another. In most birds, except the ostrich, penguin, and some others, feathers do not grow regularly over the surface in special areas (pterylæ). The feather figures as the principal distinction conferred for public service in China. There are four grades: the three-eyed, the two-eyed, and the single-eyed peacock-feather, and the rose-feather.

fed'er-al-ist, 1 fed'ər-əl-ist; 2 fĕd'er-al-ĭst, n. 1. An advocate of federalism; specif. [F-], in the United States, a member of the Federal party. 2. A believer in federal theology. See FEDERAL, a.— The Federalist, a collection of eighty-five essays by Alexander Hamilton, John Jay, and James Madison, addressed to the "People of the State of New York," and explaining and recommending the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. Seventy-nine of the essays were first published in the Independent Journal, New York, between Oct. 27, 1787, and April 2, 1788, signed "A Citizen of New York" and later "Publius." Six essays were added to the series when published in book form in 1788. They strongly influenced public opinion at the time, and are considered as a valuable commentary by the framers of the Constitution on the needs of the time and the requirements of the future.— fed"er-al-is'tic, a. Of or pertaining to federalists or federalism.

fed'er-al-ize, 1 fed'ər-əl-aiz; 2 fĕd'er-al-īz, vt. [-IZED; -IZ"ING.] I. t. To bring together under federal compact or government. II. i. To come together under a federal form of government. fed'er-al-ise‡.— fed"er-al-i-za'tion, n. The act of federalizing, or the state of being federalized; nationalization. fed"er-al-i-sa'tion‡.

fed'er-a-ry†, n. An accomplice. fed'a-ry†.

fed'er-ate, 1 fed'ər-ēt; 2 fĕd'er-āt, v. [-AT"ED; -AT"ING.] I. t. To form into or constitute as a federation; federalize; as, federated states.
II. i. To form a federation; league together.

The men of Montélimart do federate with the already federated men of Étoile. Carlyle French Rev. vol. i, p. 324. [H.]

fed'er-ate, 1 fed'ər-ɪt; 2 fĕd'er-at. I. a. United under a common government, as states or peoples; confederated; federal; as, federate powers.

The great value of a federate union of the colonies had, however, sunk deep into the minds of men. Kent Commentaries vol. i, p. 193. [O. H. 1827.]

II. n. A member of a federation or league.

fed"er-a'tion, 1 fed"ər-ē'shən; 2 fĕd"er-ā'shon, n. 1. The act of uniting in a confederacy, by league or alliance. 2. A federated body; league. See FEDERAL GOVERNMENT, 1, under FEDERAL. 3. Same as FEDERAL GOVERNMENT, 2. fed"er-al'i-ty‡. Syn.: see ALLIANCE; ASSOCIATION.— American Federation of Labor, a confederacy of trade-unions in the United States and Canada, reported as having 2,896,063 individual members. It was organized in Pittsburgh in Nov., 1881, under the name of "The Federation of Organized Trades and Labor Unions"; its present name was adopted in Dec., 1886.— Social Democratic F. [Eng.], an organization that advocates Marxist socialism founded in London in 1881 by the efforts of H. M. Hyndman, Herbert Burrows, Helen Taylor, and others.— fed"er-a'tion-ist, n. One who favors federation.

fed'er-a-tive, } 1 fed'ər-ə-tiv; 2 fĕd'er-a-tĭv, a. Of or fed'er-a-tiv[s], } pertaining to federation or alliance; federal.— -ly, adv.

All nations . . . are brothers; and each is responsible for that federative humanity which puts the ban of exclusion on none. Bancroft United States vol. iii, p. 5. [L. B. & CO. 1876.]

fed'e-ro-ite, 1 fed'ə-ro-ait; 2 fĕd'e-ro-īt, n. A form of pyroxene related to ægirite. [< E. Federor, Russian mineralogist.]

fed'i-ty†, n. Vileness; foulness. fœd'i-ty†.

Fe-dor', Fe-do'ra, n. See THEODORE.

fe-do'ra, 1 fɪ-dō'rə; 2 fe-dō'ra, n. A low hat, usually of soft felt, with a curled brim and the crown creased lengthwise, worn by both women and men: used also adjectively. [< Fedora, play by Sardou.]

fee, 1 fī; 2 fē, vt. [FEED; FEE'ING.] 1. To pay a fee to for services done or to be done; as, to fee a waiter in a restaurant. 2. To hire; hence, to bribe. 3. [Scot.] To put out for hire, as a son to service.— fee'a-bl(e[P], a.

fee[1], n. 1. A payment for services done or to be done, usually for professional or special service, the amount being sometimes fixed by law or custom and sometimes optional; compensation; charge; as, a lawyer's or doctor's fee; also, a gratuity; as, a porter's fee.

The word fee means now a reward or payment in money, in Middle English it meant property in general, including money and live stock; the Old English feoh, the phonetic equivalent of the Latin pecus, meant originally cattle. Trench Select Glossary p. 42. [K. P. & CO. 1890.]

2. A charge for a special privilege, as admission to an entertainment or membership of a society. 3. [Scot.] Wages. 4†. Hunting. Those parts of the quarry which by custom fell to the huntsman. 5†. Property; estate; especially, cattle. 6†. A bribe. [< AS. feoh, cattle, property.] fe†.

fee[2], n. 1. Law. An estate of inheritance. See phrases. 2. Feudal Law. Land, or an estate in land, held of a superior on condition of rendering him services; a feud; a fief. 3. [Poet. or Archaic.] Ownership; property.

The Poet's License!—'tis the fee Of earth and sky and river. Saxe The Poet's License st. 5.

[< OF. fie, < LL. feudum; see FEUD[2], n.] — base fee. 1. An estate of inheritance terminable on some contingency, as an estate to A and his heirs while a certain tree stands; a qualified fee. 2. A fee (under feudal law) held by a vassal at the will of his lord, the holder rendering base or common service, as plowing and hedging.— conditional fee, an estate restricted to some particular heirs to the exclusion of others.— fee'-farm", n. Land held of another in perpetuity under a stipulated rent; the tenure in land so held.— fee-farmer, n. — fee-farming, n.— fee-fund, n. Scots Law. A fund accumulated from court fees, from which the court officers are paid.— fee simple, an estate of inheritance free from condition or limitation: the largest estate known to the law.— fee tail, an estate limited to a person and the heirs of his body, or to a particular class of them; a limited fee. A fee simple may be absolute (unhampered by conditions or limitations), or qualified, or limited (its termination is then governed by the occurrence of some stated event). Tho a fee simple may be limited by certain conditions, yet it can not be shorn of its chief incidents, alienability and inheritability. In common law the rule that a fee simple can not be conveyed without using the word "heirs" has been modified in the United States; and in England by the Conveyancing Acts of 1881 and 1882 it is merely necessary to qualify the estate as a fee "simple" or "in tail" as the case may be.— great fee (Feudal Law), an estate held in capite, or directly of the crown.

fee'ble†, v. I. t. To make feeble; weaken; enfeeble. II. i. To grow or become feeble. fe'ble†; fee'blish†.

fee'ble, } 1 fī'bl; 2 fē'bl, a. [FEE'BLER; FEE'BLEST.] 1.
fee'bl[P], } Lacking muscular power; weak, especially from disease or age; debilitated; frail; decrepit; infirm; weakly; sickly. 2. Lacking strength for support or resistance; without tenacity or sturdiness; weak; as, a feeble barrier; the feeble supports gave way. 3. Lacking force, energy, or vigor; not effective or powerful; faint; pointless; colorless; insipid; as, a feeble light; a feeble cry; a feeble defense, argument, or witticism. 4†. Worthless; common; poor. [< OF. feble, F. faible, < L. flebilis, tearful, < fleo, weep.] fe'ble†. Syn.: see FAINT; WEAK. — fee'ble-mind"ed, a. 1. Deficient in intellect; imbecile; idiotic. 2. Of feeble will; lacking decision or mental force; irresolute.— f.-mindedness, n.— fe'blesse†, fee'ble-ness, n.— fee'bling, n. 1. [Rare.] One who or that which is feeble, in any sense; a weakling.

He [Henry James] has exhibited types of the American girl, the American business man, the æsthetic feebling from Boston. H. A. Beers Initial Studies ch. 7, p. 207. [CHAUT. 1891.]

fee'ble†, n. 1. A feeble person. 2. Weakness. 3. The foible of a sword.

feed, 1 fīd; 2 fēd, v. [FED; FEED'ING.] I. t. 1. To give food or nourishment to; supply with aliment or sustenance; as, to feed a child with a spoon; to feed a nation is the farmer's work. 2. To supply with what is necessary for the continuance, activity, or development of, whether material or immaterial; keep supplied or filled; as, to feed one's jealousy; to feed a furnace or a printing-press.

These plantations, requiring constant irrigation, were fed by numerous canals and reservoirs of water. Prescott Mexico vol. i, p. 284. [H. 1851.]

3. To furnish as food; use for fodder; as, to feed beets to cattle. 4. To supply as for operation upon or for manufacture; as, to feed grain to a mill. 5. To cause to be cropped or grazed, as herbage by cattle; as, to feed land. 6†. To entertain; edify.
II. i. 1. To take food; eat: now applied chiefly to animals. 2. To subsist; prey; as, the robin feeds on worms. 3. To rest for satisfaction, strength, or comfort; as, to feed on a promise; to feed on hope.

A young girl betrays, in a moment, that her eyes have been feeding on the face where you find them fixed. Holmes Professor p. 196. [H. M. & CO. 1884.]

4. Association Football. To pass the ball (to forward) as an aggressive measure. 5. [Prov. Eng.] To grow fat. [< AS. fēdan, < fōda, food.]

feed, n. 1. Anything that is used as food; especially, food for domestic animals; fodder, such as hay and grain. 2. The amount of food given to an animal at one time; a single meal; as, six quarts of oats is a feed for a horse. 3. Mach. (1) The motion that carries (a) material into a machine or work toward a tool, as in the advance of a log upon the saw, or (b) a tool toward, along, or into the work on which it operates, as an auger into a sill. (2) The machinery by which motion of the work toward the tool or of the tool toward the work is produced; feed-motion; feed-works; feed-gear. Here the word is used in naming many parts and appurtenances, as (a) for holding material conveniently (feed-board, f.-box, f.-table, f.-tank, etc.); (b) for feeding fuel, water, lubricant, or material, as feed-apron, f.-bed, f.-cloth, f.-cock, f.-cup, f.-door, f.-engine, f.-hopper, f.-pipe, f.-pump, f.-roller (or -roll), f.-sheet, float-f., etc.; (c) for guiding or measuring, as feed-gage, f.-guide; (d) for controlling the motion, as feed-bar, f.-cone (gear), f.-hand, f.-pawl, f.-peg, f.-ratchet, f.-regulator, f.-rod, f.-screw, f.-wheel, etc. (3) The material supplied to a machine to be operated upon or consumed, as wool to a carding-engine or water to a boiler. (4) Sharp sand and water supplied to a saw-blade in cutting stone. 4. The amount of water necessary to permit a vessel to pass through a canal-lock. 5. Founding. Same as FEED-HEAD. 6. [Slang.] A meal for a person, or the act of eating it; also, a banquet; as, there was a big feed last night. 7†. A grazing-tract; pasture. 8†. One that has been nurtured or fed.— concentrated feed (Agric.), rich nourishing fodder containing but a small proportion of moisture or coarse fiber, as cottonseed-meal, gluten-meal, grain, oil-cake, etc.— differential f., a feed, as in a lathe, accomplished by a differential motion, by which a slow, even, and powerful forward movement is given to a tool.— f.-bag, n. Same as NOSE-BAG.— f.-boiler, n. A boiler used to cook feed for stock.— f.-grinder, n. A mill for grinding cattle-feed.— f.-head, n. 1. The head of water from a reservoir, etc., used in supplying a pump or a boiler by gravitation. 2. Founding. An extra supply of molten metal at the top of a mold, serving to force the liquid metal into the finer lines of the mold.— f.-heater, n. 1. Steam-engine. A device for heating feed-water before its admission to a boiler, commonly by exposure to the exhaust steam, sometimes by furnace-heat. 2. A feed-boiler.— f.-motion, n. See def. 3 (2) above.— f.-rack, n. A rack for holding fodder, as for cattle.— f. water, n. Water supplied to a boiler.— hopper-f., n. In the manufacture of cotton and woolen fabrics, a device for feeding the raw material to any machine to which it may be adjusted, as to wool-washing machinery, wool-pickers, cotton-carders, etc.— red f., the aggregate of diminutive copepod crustaceans upon which herring, mackerel, and similar fish feed.— shotgun f., a feed-motion for a sawmill carriage, by which great speed is given, the carriage being attached to or driven by the piston-rod of a very long steam-cylinder.

feed'er, 1 fīd'ər; 2 fēd'er, n. 1. One who or that which feeds; especially, one who feeds cattle for fattening. 2. A person, animal, or plant that feeds or takes nourishment; a consumer; as, rye is a grosser feeder than wheat. 3. Anything that feeds, supplies the wants of, or increases the size or importance of something else. Specif.: (1) A stream flowing into a river, or a river or artificial channel supplying a canal. (2) A branch railroad. (3) A conducting wire serving to carry an additional supply of electricity to a point on a line which may be depleted, as in a trolley-railway system: called feed-wire. (4) Mining. A small vein or spur connecting with a main lode. (5) A vessel or trough for conveniently supplying food to animals; as, a calf-feeder; chicken-feeder.

4. A person or a mechanical appliance for supplying material to a machine, as paper to a printing-press, water to a boiler, grain to millstones, or ore to a smelting-furnace.

Fifty proof-readers are constantly employed in the Government printing-office, besides one hundred and fifteen *reader*s and thirty-four ruling-machine feeders.

CARNEGIE Triumphant Democracy ch. 18, p. 435. [a. 1888.]

5. Mining. A blower, or discharge of gas, from a fissure.

6. One who encourages, supports, or incites. 7. Entom. An organ of the mouth-parts. 8. A game similar to rounders; also, the player who serves the ball to the bat, as in rounders. 9†. A dependent or parasite.—feed'-a-pe'ce, n. Slang. An adjustable resistance to a feeder, to regulate the difference of potential at the junction-box.

feed'ing, I. ppl. a. 1. The act of giving to eat, eating, or supplying material, as to a machine.

CHANNING Works, Self-Culture p. 22. [a. U. A. 1833.]

2. That which is eaten; food; as, is there good feeding there? 3. The ground that furnishes feed or grazing; pasturage. —feed'ing-bot'tle, n. A bottle for feeding milk or other liquid to infants, &c. —feed'ing-cake, n. Oil-cake.—f.-dish, n. A circular feeding-mechanism in the Hübner machine for continuous cotton-combing.—f.-groove, n. The narrow trough on the lower surface of the honey-comb, which honey is brought by compression of the honey-sac when one bee feeds another.—f.-ground, n. A place where an animal habitually resorts to find food, as land or in the sea.—f.-rod, n. A wrought-iron rod by aid of which, in making heavy castings, fluid metal is kept supplied to all parts of the mold, counterbalancing sinkage.—f.-screw f., the act or system of cramming food down an animal's throat by machinery: used in fattening poultry.

fee'-fa'-fum', I. ff'-fə'-fŭm', 2 fē'-fə'-fŭm', n. Nonsense or words put in the mouth of a giant in the nursery tale of Jack the Giant-killer; hence, a giant or bugbobih; any mysterious jargon or mummery to save the foolish or ignorant. fee'-faw'-fum'ish, a. Gigantic.

The Spirits of Milton . . . have no horns, no tails, no wooden legs, no fee-faw-fum of Tasso and Klopstock.

LOWELL Essays, Milton p. 8. [a. 1880.]

fee'-farm'er, n. See under FEE, n.

fee'ing-mar'ket, I. ff'ın-mā'ket, 2 fē'ing-mā'ket, n. [Prov. Eng. & Scot.] A general semi-annual gathering on the farms for servants in order for the purpose of hiring or hiring themselves for the ensuing six months or year. fee'ing-fair'†.

Fee'jee, Fee-jee'an, a. & n. Same as FIJI, FIJIAN.

feek, I. ffk; 2 fēk, vi. [Prov. Eng.] To wander restlessly about.

feel, I. fīl; 2 fēl, v. [PRET; FELT/ING.] I. t. 1. To perceive, recognize, or become aware of by the senses, especially by the sense of touch; as, I was quickly to become aware of sensations located in the skin, muscles, joints, or internal organs, or of objects recognized through these sensations, and especially as having some affective tone; as, to feel the cold; to feel a pain; to feel the prick of a pin, or the roughness of a board. 2. To have the emotions or sensibilities roused or quickened by; be mentally stirred by; have a peculiar sense of; enter into; experience; as, to feel the influence of a summer morning; to feel joy or remorse; to feel music.

A million hearts have felt as much As ever prince of poets told.

JOAQUIN MILLER Ina st. 5, pt. 24.

3. To examine by touching or handling; by contact; touch; hence, to test or make trial of; find out; as, to feel one's pulse or the texture of a velvet; to feel one's way in the dark; to feel the public temper. 4. Reflexively, to be conscious of being in some state or condition; as, to feel oneself sick or guilty. 5†. To perceive by the sense of smell.

II. i. 1. To have (a specified) sensation by touch or through the sensory nerves; as, to feel cold, weary, or sick. 2. To consider oneself to be; be conscious of being; followed by an adjective describing the state; as, to feel anxious, gratified, or pressed with business.

Illinois, in the early days, was a long way towards Massachusetts as did Missouri. T. ROOSEVELT Benton p. 10. [M. M. & CO. 1887.]

3. To give a sensation to the touch; seem to the touch: followed by an adjective descriptive of the sensation or seeming; as, velvet feels soft; silk feels smooth; an easy chair feels comfortable. 4. To have the emotions or sensibilities stirred or quickened; be full of feeling; as, we should feel for the suffering. 5. To make examination by touching or handling; find one's way by touch; as, to feel of a garment; to feel around a room or along a fence. 6. [Colloq.] To have an impulse: with to; as, I feel to agree with you. [< AS. fēlan.] fēle†.—to feel after, to search for, seek, as by groping in the dark.

St. Paul . . . showed them that they were feeling after God, but blindly.

ROBERTSON Sermons p. 852. [a. 1870.]

feel, n. 1. The sense of touch. 2. A sensation of touch, or one closely related to that of touch; feeling; as, cold produces a disagreeable feel. 3. Perception in general as accompanied with feeling; especially, mental perception and appreciation; as, his feel of autumn joy.

Ah, 'tis the thought, The deadly feel of solitude.

KEATS Endymion bk. ii. st. 7.

4. The quality of a thing that is perceived by the touch; as, fur has a soft feel.

feeld†, n. Field. Hold.

feele', a., prom. & adv. Much; many.— feele'feld†, a. Manifold'er, 1 ff'ər; 2 fē'ər, n. 1. One who or that which feels. 2. Zool. A part serving, or supposed to serve, as an organ of touch in various animals, especially an antenna of an insect or crustacean, a palpus, tentacle, or the like. 3. Something put forth indirectly to gain information difficult to obtain by direct means, as the sentiments or designs of others, a statement or movement intended to draw another person to express himself; also, a trial venture; as, this observation was by way of a feeler; to make a little deal in stocks as a feeler.

4. Naut. The preliminary gust of a storm.

feel'ing, I. ff'ing; 2 fē'ing, pa. 1. Possessed of warm sensibilities; quivering; the sensibilities easily aroused; easily moved; sympathetic; as, a feeling heart. 2. Marked by deep sensibility or by fervor and earnestness; hence, causing feeling; affecting; as, a feeling tale. —feel'ing-ly, adv.

feel'ing, n. 1. The sense of touch or immediate contact, as aroused by stimulating any area of the skin, muscles, or internal organs, whether (1) as restricted to the sensations, or sensational elements somewhat so, as the feeling of cold or of pain; or (2) as applied to the fact or the power of perceiving the qualities of the objects arousing the sensations; as, the feeling of hardness; the feeling of a glassy or metallic surface. Hence, often, (3) the collective state or general tone of consciousness due to more or less complex and obscure combinations of these classes of sensations; as, a vested feeling; a feeling of malaise, etc.

It was to me like the feeling of spring weather after winter.

NEWMAN Apologia pt. iii, p. 75. [L. & A. CO. 1894.]

2. Any emotion as apart from the body; mental stirring; emotion; sentiment; presentiment; as, to express feelings of sympathy; the feeling of the meeting was hostile.

The word feeling is the only term under which we can possibly collect the phenomena of pleasure and pain.

HAMILTON Metaphysics lect. xi, p. 127. [a. & s. 1859.]

3. Sensitiveness, or the capacity to feel deeply; refined sensibility; delicacy; tenderness; sympathy; by extension, sentimentality; as, a woman of feeling; to hurt one's feelings.

She was ready to sacrifice hekonants of feelings, when the feelings were other people's. H. JAMES, JR. Tragic Muse vol. i, ch. 19, p. 375. [L. M. & CO. 1890.]

4. Psychol. In the widest sense, the affecting aspect of all consciousness, and the phenomena distinguished from the intellectual and voluntary, or active, aspects. In this sense the more complex forms of feeling are divided into the emotions and the sentiments, the former characterized by a strongly organic substance, the latter by the presence of the higher forms of intellectual, artistic, and moral elements. Specif.: (1) Certain sensations aroused by contact of the stimulus with the afferent nerves ending peripherally in the skin and mucous membrane, as the so-called feelings of light pressure, heat, cold, or pain. (2) Sensations which involve the excitement of the nerves ending in the underlying tissues and give the feelings of tension, strain, movement, size, weight, and solidity of bodies (kinesthetic and stereognostic). (3) Obscure and complex sensations, due (a) to a blending of skin sensations, as the feeling of roughness, or being tickled, of itching, etc., or (b) to the irritation of internal organs, as the feeling of general discomfort (somatic cathesis). (4) Reproductions of pain or pleasure, the pleasure-pain tone of many, if not all, of the perceptional and ideational forms of conscious mental life. (5) [Rare.] Every fact or form of conscious mental life.

We ought to have some general term, . . . Feeling has the verb 'to feel,' both active and neuter, and such derivatives as 'feelingly,' 'felt,' 'feelingness,' and the like, in excellent use.

WM. JAMES Psychol. ch. i, p. 186. [L. & CO.]

Mind is distinguished by the three attributes or properties named Feeling, Volition, and Intellect.

BAIN Emotions and Will p. 3. [A. 1876.]

In modern psychology, there is a well-marked tendency to restrict the term feeling to mean blind or affective process. We find a classification of mental functions as those of the intellect, the feelings or sensibilities, and the will: feeling here including emotions, sentiments, moods, and feelings proper.

New Internat. Encyc. vol. vii, p. 508. [D. M. & CO. '05.]

5. Art. That quality by which expression is given to the emotions, and which should actuate a painter in the conception, selection, execution, and treatment of every expression in art. 6. Rhet. Pathos that deals with the tender emotions. feelth† [Prov. Eng.]. Syn.: consciousness, emotion, impression, passion, pathos, sensation, sense, sensibility, sentiment, sentimentality. See IMPULSE.—feel'ing-ef-fect', n. Psychol. The affective result of any stimuli: distinguished from the sensory effect. Feeling tone is a blend extensive or intensive according as it does, or does not, relate to the temporal and spatial arrangement of the sensations, rather than simply to their qualities as sensations of this or that sense.—f. tone, n. Psychol. The affective or emotional characteristics, or aspect, of an intellectual act or state.— law of f. (Psychol.), the doctrine that the association of ideas is determined by the condition of the feelings rather than by the intellectual relations of ideas themselves. [strip of land.—feer'ing, n.

feer, I. fīr; 2 fēr, n. [Scot.] To mark out for plowing, as a field. n. [Scot.] A short strong; fine.

Feld'spar', I. feld'spär'; 2 feld'spär', n. Mineral. Any one of a group of minerals 1 2 3 4 having in common a prismatic angle of about 120°, and consisting of aluminum silicate with potassium, sodium, calcium, or barium.

Forms of Feldspar.

Feldspars are cleavable in two directions at or near to right angles, and are granular class. 2. Andesine. 3. Oligoclase. 4. Orthoclase.

compact, vitreous to waxy, class. 4. Albite.

pearly, subresinous, transparent to subtranslucent, often opalescent, and either colorless, or white, red, green, bluish, or gray. They are divided according to their crystallization into (1) monoclinic feldspars, including (a) orthoclase, or common feldspar, a potassium aluminum silicate, $KAlSi_3O_8$, with varieties in which the potassium is partially replaced by sodium, $(K,Na)AlSi_3O_8$, called soda orthoclase, and (b) hyalo-phane, a potassium barium aluminum silicate, $(K,Ba)_2Al_2Si_6O_{16}$; and (2) triclinic feldspars, or plagioclase, including (a) microcline, a potassium aluminum silicate, $KAlSi_3O_8$, with varieties in which the potassium is partially replaced by sodium, $(K,Na)AlSi_3O_8$, called soda microcline, (b) albite, a sodium aluminum silicate, $NaAlSi_3O_8$, (c) anorthite, a calcium aluminum silicate, $CaAl_2Si_2O_8$, and (d) oligoclase, andesine, and labradorite, varying mixtures of sodium-aluminum silicates of varying composition corresponding to compounds varying from $(NaAlSi_3O_8)$ to $(CaAl_2Si_2O_8)$.

The family of the Feldspars forms one of the most important of all the constituents of rocks, seeing that its members constitute by mixture the largest portion of the plutonic and volcanic rocks.

Fe'li-dæ, [1 fī'li-dē; 2 fē'lĭ-dē, n. pl. Mam. A family of fissiped carnivores, especially adroit predatory, having only one true molar and two or three premolars in each jaw-bone, and the auditory bulla divided internally and closely appressed to the paroccipital process, of which the domestic cat is the type and which includes the lion, tiger, leopard, puma, jaguar, wildcat, cheetah, etc. The Felidæ are distinguished among carnivores by their uniform structure, small heads, strong and flexible spines, looseness of skin, and their wonderful quickness, suppleness, and muscularity, characteristics correlated with their predatory habits, stealthy mode of approaching their quarry, final spring, etc. With the exception of two or three of the smaller species, as the lion and concolor, the cats are all arboreal. They showing muscles involved are mostly nocturnal, their eyes in the extension and retraction of the claws, which preserves the sharpness of these highly important weapons when not in use, when walking, etc., and enables them to hold down their prey until they can administer a fatal bite. Their jaws are short and immensely powerful, enabling them to crush large bones. They are clothed in soft fur, usually quite long, especially in those forms living in cold regions, but short in the tropical and desert species, as the lion, the males of which variety are also distinguished by a mane. Their colors, which are largely protective, are usually dark, with a tendency to fawn or brown, and spots, to which stripes are closely allied, are very common, appearing in the young even where the adults are concolorous, as in the lion, puma, etc. They are not gregarious, living and hunting alone or in small family groups, are mostly monogamous, and incline to attach themselves to restricted localities. They inhabit all parts of the world except Australia, New Zealand, Polynesia, and some parts of Malaysia. They are probably derived from the extinct saber-toothed tiger of the Miocene period. Fe'lid, n. [< L. felis, cat, + -ID.]

1. Skull of a puma (Felis mosta).
2. Skull of a tiger (Felis tigris).

Fel'lows, [1 fel'ōz; 2 fĕl'ōs, Sir Charles (⁸/21799–¹¹/21860). An English archeologist and explorer; sent the Lycian marbles to England.

fel'low ser'vant. A person who is engaged with others in a common pursuit under the same master from whom are derived authority and compensation. In a few of the United States it has been held that all who serve the same master are fellow servants, but they may be engaged in different grades or departments of the same general business, altho an employee representing the common employer is usually excepted.

According to the digest of the labor laws compiled by the U. S. Bureau of Labor and revised to include the legislation of 1904, the laws enacted in the various States with regard to the liability of employers for injuries sustained by employees embrace statutes modifying the fellow-servants doctrine by adopting the theory (a) that all superior employees are vice-principals as regards their subordinates, and (b) that co-service is not a bar to an action for injuries caused by the negligence of an employee in a different department.

The . . . defense of the employer is what is known as the fellow-servant rule, or the doctrine of common employment. This rule has been stated thus: "A master is not bound to indemnify one servant for injuries caused by the negligence of another servant in the same common employment as himself unless the negligent servant was the master's representative." This doctrine was enunciated in England in 1837, and independently the next year in this country; and as a result of the growth of the number of employees in large undertakings and the consequent lack of immediate supervision by the employer, its application has come to be of the utmost importance.

fe'lo-ny, [1 fel'o-ni; 2 fĕl'o-ny, n. [-NIES, 1 -niz; 2 -nĭs, pl.] 1. Crim. Law. (1) At common law, an offense the punishment of which carried with it the forfeiture of lands or goods, or both. (2) [U. S.] One of the highest class of offenses, variously limited by common law or by statute, and (usually) punishable with death or imprisonment in a State prison.

In feudal law felony meant forfeiture for an offense on the part of a vassal as against his superior lord, that cost him his feud or title to lands, which reverted to the lord of the fee, or, in case of a crime against society, to the crown.

In modern usage, and especially in American law, forfeiture of estate for crime being generally abolished, the word is used, as defined above, in distinction from misdemeanor, an offense of minor degree punishable by fine or imprisonment in a county jail. Hence, felony is now a generic term that denotes a general class or grade of offenses, usually those of greater enormity, as treason, murder, rape, robbery, arson, etc. In England forfeitures for felony were abolished by the Felony Act of 1870, which also permitted the appointment of escheators to attend to the estates and property of felons in custody.

United Editors' Encyc. vol. xiv, art. Felon.

2†. Wickedness. 3†. Felony. [< F. félonie, < LL. felonia, < felo(n-), traitor.] fel'o-nie.

Pertaining to or characteristic of a woman or womankind; womanly; feminine. 3. Bot. Having a pistil, but no stamen; pistillate; capable of being fertilized and producing fruit. 4. Noting some implement or object having a mate or correlative known as the male; as, a female (light-colored) sapphire; specif., in mechanics, having a hollow or bore into which the correlative may enter. female-hater. SYN.: effeminate, feminine, womanish, womanly. We apply female to the sex, feminine to the qualities, especially the finer physical or mental qualities that distinguish the female sex in the human family, or to the objects appropriate for or especially employed by them. A female voice is the voice of a woman; a feminine voice may belong to a man. Womanish denotes the undesirable, womanly the admirable or lovely qualities of woman. Womanly tears would suggest respect and sympathy, womanish tears a touch of contempt. The word effeminate is always used reprochfully, and only of man as possessing womanly traits such as are inconsistent with true manliness.—ANT.: male, manly, masculine, virile.—female rime, a feminine rime.—f. thread or screw, a screw-thread cut on an interior surface, as a nut, to receive a screw.

In the following sentence female is appropriately used as an expression of contempt: He did not kill him go and sell himself to the first female he could find possessor of wealth. But female is correctly used also as the correlative of male, whether the latter be expressed or not; as, "Statistics of population show that there is an excess of females in many of our cities." Compare GENTLEWOMAN; LADY.

2. Bot. A plant bearing a pistil and producing fruit but having no stamens in any of its organs, a plant having and lacking the analogs of the same organs. Fer'gus-son, ı fūr'gu-son; 2 fēr'gu-son, n. 1. James (1/21 1808–1/21880), a Scottish writer on architecture. 2. Robert (4/21750–10/21774), a Scottish poet; prototype of Burns. 3. Sir William (?/21808–3/21877), a Scottish surgeon.

fer't-a, ı fīr'e-ə; 2 fēr'i-a, n. [-AS, ı -ī; 2 -ē, pl.] [LL.]

1. R. C. Ch. Any day of the week except Sunday, if not strictly speaking a feast-day. 2. pl. Rom. Antiq. Holidays devoted to the worship of some deity or to the commemoration of some event, public or private. fe'ri-ent, ı fī'ri-ənt; 2 fē'ri-ent, a. Relating to weekdays, particularly those not feast-days or fast-days. 2. Or or pertaining to holidays.— ferial use, church music for ordinary use, as opposed to festal use. — fer'i-ous†, a. Keeping holiday; cessation from labor.— fer'ist, n. A holiday or feast-day.

fer'id-ol, ı fer'id-ōl; 2 fēr'id'ol, n. [Ar.] An Oriental hooded coat or cloak; a form of gown or mantle worn by women. fer-id'jee†; fer-ij'ee†; fer-ij'jee†.

fe'rine, n. A wild beast or beast of prey.

Fe-ri-ne've, ı fe-ri-nē'vē; 2 fe-ri-ne'va, n. In the Orient, a European; Frank; among the Hindus, a European, usually in a disparaging sense, or specif., an Indian-born Portuguese. [< Hind. Firangi, Farang, FRANK, n.] Fa-rin'ghee; Fe-ran'ghi; Fe-rin'gi.

Fe-ri'no, ı fē-rī'no; 2 fe-rī'no, Pierre Marie Barthélemy, Count (1747–4/21816). An Italian general; served in the French army.

fe-ri'son, ı fe-rī'son or fī're-son; 2 fē-rī'son or fē'ri-son, n. Logic. A valid mood of the third figure. See MOOD. [Coined.]

fer'i-ty, n. Wildness; fierceness; cruelty.

fer'ling, n. A fourth part; quarter. Specif.: (1) A fourth part of a penny. (2) A quarter of a landyard, as an acre, hide, etc.— fer'ling-no'blet, n. See COIN.

fer'ly, ı fer'li; 2 fēr'ly. [Prov. Brit.] I. vt. To wonder. II. a. Extraordinary; unexpected; sudden.

fermt, n. Same as FARM, fermet'.

fern'sage', ı fūrn'sāj; 2 fērn'saj', n. [F.] A system of farming land rented for a fixed sum.

fern-mall', ı fer-năl'; 2 fer-năl', n. [OF.] A clasp, catch, or buckle, as of a belt. fer-madle'.

Fer-man'agh, ı fer-man'ə; 2 fer-măn'a, n. A county in Ulster province, Ireland; 714 sq. m.; county-town, Enniskillen.

fer-ma'ta, ı fer-mā'tə; 2 fēr-mā'ta, n. [It.] Mus. A pause or hold.

Fer-ma'tian, ı fer-mā'shən; 2 fer-mā'shan, a. Of or pertaining to Pierre de Fermat, a French mathematician (1601–1665), or to the method of mathematical induction used by him.

This method assumes that if a series of members be constructed according to a given principle, the character of any and every member of the series may be determined by that principle.— a correct rule, the it may be improperly applied.

fer-ment', ı fer-ment'; 2 fer-mănt', n. I. t. To produce fermentation in. fer-ment'ate†. 2. Figuratively, to stir with emotion or passions; agitate. 3†. To cause gentle boiling or ebullition in. II. i. 1. To undergo fermentation; work. 2. To be in commotion; be agitated by emotion or passions. [< L. fermento, < fermentum; see FERMENT, n.] — fer-ment'ing-square', n. A shallow fermentating-vat. — fermenting-vat, n. Brewing. A large vessel in which to ferment worts. — fer-ment'a-bl(e', a. Capable of fermentation. fer-ment'a-bil'i-ty, n. — fer-ment'a-ble-ness, n. — fer-ment'a-bly, adv. — fer-ment'ed-ness, n. — fer-ment'er-ship, n. — fer-ment'ol'ter, Chem. I. a. Fermentable. II. n. A fermentable substance.

fer'ment, ı fūr'ment; 2 fēr'ment, n. 1. A substance capable of producing fermentation. Compare FERMENTATION. 2. Excitement or agitation; commotion. 3. [Rare.] A gentle boiling or internal movement of the constituents of a fluid. [< L. fermentum, yeast, < fervo, boil.] — conform ferment, a bacteriolytic ferment able to destroy only the bacteria which its parent-bacteria produce. — ferment-cell', n. A cell in which a ferment is secreted. — f.-oil, n. A volatile oil formed when vegetable matter undergoes fermentation in water; supposed to be the result of a decomposition of plant-cells in the absence of oxygen. — f.-organism, n. An organism that causes fermentation. — f.-secretion, n. The production of an unorganized ferment or enzym. — glycolytic f., a ferment assumed to decompose glucose into water and carbon dioxid: supposed by Lépine to exist in the blood. glucolytic f. — heteroform f., a bacteriolytic ferment which is able to destroy other bacteria than those which produced it.

Fer'men-ta'ri-an, ı fūr'men-tē'ri-ən; 2 fēr'men-tā'ri-an, n. Ch. Hist. One who uses leavened bread in the Lord's Supper; a term of reproach used by the Latins against the Greeks. Compare AZYMITE; PROZYMITE.

fer'men-ta'tion, ı fūr'men-tā'shun; 2 fēr'men-tā'shan, n. Chem. 1. A chemical decomposition of an organic compound, induced by living organisms (organized ferments) or by chemical agents (unorganized or chemical ferments or enzyms); in its most restricted sense, alcoholic fermentation.

> In the first the action is due to the growth of the ferment, as in the formation of acetic acid from alcohol by the action of the vinegar-plant, and in the second the enzym causes a chemical change without being itself altered, as in diastase. Fermentation is produced by various organisms; these apparently derive their nourishment from the original compound and yield products that are poisonous to the ferment. Hence fermentation ceases when the nutriment is exhausted or the fermentation products are in excess. Heat, cold, and certain foreign substances (antiseptics) arrest fermentation. Different kinds of fermentation obtain specific names according to product; thus, acetic or acetous, yielding acetic acid; alcoholic or vinous, yielding alcohol; ammoniacal, yielding ammonium carbonate; benzoic, yielding alcohol; benzole, yielding benzole acid; butyric, yielding butyric acid; lactic, yielding lactic acid; and viscous, yielding a gummy mass. For putrefactive fermentation, see PUTREFACTION.

> Fermentation will be allowed to continue for a . . . period, varying from fifteen hours to several days, during which time the husks and stalks of the grapes, rising to the surface of the must, form a thick incrustation. H. VENTRELLY Facts About Port and Madeira p. 53. [w. s. & co. 1880.]

> I have been inclined for a long time to consider fermentation, properly so called, as chemical phenomena, correlative with physiological actions of a peculiar nature. — Justus Freiherr Liebig, Schutzenberger's Fermentation [trans.], p. 173. [k. & co. 1876.]

2. Figuratively, commotion, agitation, or internal working; intellectual or social excitement; as, a fermentation of society; fermentation of religion.

> All natures come to their manhood through some experience of fermentation! H. W. BEECHER Norwood p. 160. [a. 1868.]

3. A gentle ebullition or internal commotion in a fluid. — bot'tom-fer'men-ta'tion, n. Chem. An alcoholic fermentation used in making beer and mild, fine-flavored wines; so called because the yeast-cells collect near the bottom of the vat, owing to the low content of carbonic acid in the mash. The products are of less alcoholic strength than those resulting from top-fermentation. — f. test (Med.), a test of the urine by adding yeast, which induces fermentation if sugar is present. — f. theory of disease, see GERM-. — fer'men-ta'tion-tube', n. An apparatus made of glass for detecting gases freed by fermentation. — tobacco-f., n. A fermentation peculiar to tobacco-curing in which oxidizing ferments are supposed to be active.

fer'men-ti'tious, ı fūr'men-tish'us; 2 fēr'men-tish'us, a. Like or marked by fermentation.

fer'men-tol'o-gy, ı fūr'men-tol'o-ji; 2 fēr'men-tol'o-gy, n. The science or study of fermentation and ferments. [< FERMENT + -OLOGY.]

fer'men'tum, ı fer-men'tum; 2 fēr-men'tum, n. [L.] Eccl. A portion of the consecrated bread sent by the Pope to the titular priests, or by bishops to the parish priests that they admitted one another to Christian communion.

fer'mer-cer†, n. A superintendent of the infirmary of a religious house.

fer'me-ture, ı fer'me-chur or -tūr; 2 fēr'me-chur or -tūr, n. [F.] The breech-closing apparatus of a firearm.

fer'mier', ı fer'myā; 2 fēr'myā', n. [F.] A farmer, specif., one who farms taxes; a farmer-general. 2. A tenant who cultivates land under lease.

fer-mi-on', n. Old Eng. Law. A close-time for deer. 2. A deer-park or -preserve. 3. Deer; venison.

fer'mo, ı fer'mo; 2 fēr'mo, n. A city in Ascoli Piceno province, Italy; has a cathedral and university.

Fer'mor, ı fēr'mōr; 2 fēr'mōr, William (?/21704–2/21771). A count and Russian general; prominent in the Turkish war of 1736; opposed Frederick II. of Prussia.

fer'mour', n. A farmer. [Ireland.

Fer-moy', ı fer-moi'; 2 fer-mây', n. A town in Cork county, fern†, a. & adv. Ancient; formerly; remote; distant. fernet.

fern, ı fūrn; 2 fērn, n. Any flowerless (cryptogamous) plant of the order Filicales. Ferns are herbaceous, rarely tree-like plants with creeping or erect rootstocks and tufts of variously cut fronds (leaves). The reproductive bodies (spores) are borne on the back or margin of the fronds in special receptacles (sporangia) which are collected in variously shaped heaps (sori). See FILICALES. See illus. on p. 911.

> In tropical countries some of the ferns are woody plants, attaining the size of trees, rising with a branchless trunk over fifty feet in height, and then spreading out their leaves like a palm-tree.
> W. FLAGG Holeyon Days, Flowerless Plants p. 247. [n. & a. 1881.]

[< AS. fearn.] farn†.

— adder's fern, n. The common polypod (Polypodium vulgare). — adder's tongue f., Ophioglossum vulgatum. — baby-f., n. The black maidenhair fern. — bird's- foot f. 1. A western American fern (Pellæa ornithopus), dark-brown and pinnate-leaved, with numerous sessile pinnæ cut into three segments, the central one being the largest. 2. A cultivated tropical fern (Chelianthes radiata) with pinnæ radiating from a common center.— bird's-nest f., a low-growing fern (Asplenium nidus) with long undivided fronds, which form a nest-like cluster.— black f., a handsome New Zealand fern with bipinnate leaves: cultivated in greenhouses in Europe and the United States. —blooming f., same as FLOWERING FERN.— blue f., a North-American fern (Pellæa atropurpurea) with lanceolate leaves and sessile pinnules; the cliff-brake.— bog-f., a Ferns.

1. Rootstock and frond of Polypodium. 2. Fronds of Asplenium trichomanes; 2a, pinna of the same, bearing sori. 3. Fertile frond of Osmunda cinnamomea. 4. Part of the frond of Adiantum pedatum.

pinnate-leaved fern (Woodwardia virginica) with long, stout rootstock, and sterile and fertile leaves similar in outline; the Virginia chain-fern.— Boston f., a form of the common sword-fern.— buckhorn-f., n. Same as ROYAL FERN. — caterpillar-f., n. Same as HART'S-TONGUE.— climbing f., a fern of the genus Lygodium, the only species in the United States, is a slender twiner from 1 to 3 feet long, overrunning bushes, etc.— coffee-f., n. The fern Pelæa andromedæfolia, found in Arizona and California, so-called by its name from the resemblance to coffee-kernels of its revolute-margined leaf-segments.— coral-f., n. Same as PARASOL-FERN.— cotton-f., n. A Californian fern (Notholæna newberryi), so called from its covering of soft white hairs.— crape-f., n. A New Zealand fern (Todea superba) with very large fronds and densely tomentose rachis. The young leaves exhibit the remarkable peculiarity of having the cells occupied by a well-marked apical cell.— crest, crested, or crested-shield f., a large fern (Dryopteris cristata) of the family Polypodiaceæ, occurring in the northern part of both hemispheres.— deer-f., n. A hardy polypodiaceous fern (Struthiopteris spicant) of the north temperate zone. Deer relish the young fronds, and in some parts of Europe the plant is cultivated.— ditch-f., n. Same as ROYAL FERN. — eagle-f., n. The common brake.— elk's-horn f., Platycerium alcicorne.— female f., the lady-fern (Asplenium filix-fœmina).— f. ally, any species belonging to the orders Salviniales, Equisetales, Lycopodiales, or Isoetales.— fern'-ball', n. A dried fern-rhizome, usually imported from Japan. It is started into growth by soaking in water, and subsequent drying in a hot room, shaded.— f.-bird, n. [Austral.] Anyone of three small birds of New Zealand (Sphenœacus punctatus, S. rufescens, and S. fulvus) that frequent dense growth of fern.— f.-bracken, n. Same as BRACKEN.— f.-brake, n. 1. Bracken. 2. A clump of ferns.— f.-bush, n. The sweet-fern.— fern'-cha'fer, n. [Prov. Eng.] A beetle (Melolontha vulgaris), the favorite midsummer food of the fern-owl or goatchafer.— fern'gale', n. Sweet-fern.— fern'leaf', n. A slender red alga (Callithamnion gracillimum).— f. meadow-wee'd, same as SWEET-FERN.— f.-moss, n. Any species of Fissidens, a large genus of mosses. — f.-owl, n. [Prov. Eng.] 1. The European goatsucker. 2. The short-eared owl.— f.-palm, n. Bot. A sago-palm (Metroxylon rumphii).— f.-seed, n. The imaginary invisible seeds of the fern, which were formerly fancied to render one carrying them invisible. Ferns, as is now well known, have no true seeds.— fern'shaw', n. A fern-brake or thicket.— ferns'mund', n. Flowering fern.— f.-tree, n. [Austral.] Same as TREE-FERN.— filmy f., a fern with a filmy pellucid frond, as in the genera Hymenophyllum and Trichomanes.— floating f., an aquatic fern (Ceratopteris thalictroides) found in the warm regions of the globe. pod's f., Osmunda regalis.— fragrant f., a polypodiaceous fern (Dryopteris fragrans) with stout rootstock and aromatic fronds: common in the colder half of the north temperate zone.— fragrant shield-f., same as f.— grass-f., n. Any one of the species Vittaria, esp. V. lineata of Florida.— hair-f., n. The maidenhair.— Hartford f., a climbing fern (Lygodium palmatum), with palmately 5- to 7-lobed pinnules.— hay-scented f., see Dennstædtia.— horseshoe-f., n. Same as POTATO-FERN. See under POTATO.— kidney-f., n. Same as NARROW-LEAVED SPLEENWORT.— king or king's f., the royal fern.— maiden f., a fern of the genus Adiantum. See MAIDENHAIR.— net-f., n. Any species of Dictyopteris.— New York f., a common swamp shield-fern (Dryopteris noveboracensis), with deltate pale-green elliptic-lanceolate pinnate fronds.— parasol-f., n. An Australian fern (Dicanopteris circinata) with long, gracefully pinnate, leaves. — prickly f. 1. A North-American fern (Polystichum braunii) of the family Polypodiaceæ. 2. A greenhouse tree-fern (Alsophila australis) sometimes attaining a height of 30 feet.— royal f., an osmundaceous fern (Osmunda regalis) growing in clumps 2 to 3 feet high, with very large fronds. The leaves bear panicles at the summit.— scented f., Nephrodium oreopteris.— sensitive f., Onoclea sensibilis.— star's-horn f., same as ELK'S-HORN FERN.— sword-f., n. A polypodiaceous fern (Nephrolepis exaltata), a native of the tropics, with long sword-shaped fronds.

Fern, Fanny. The pennname of Sara Payson Parton.

Fern'ald, 1 fûr'nəld; 2 fêr'nald. James Champlin (5/11 1838–11/10 1918), American Baptist churchman; lexicographer; grammarian. Students' Standard Dictionary, Synonyms, Antonyms and Prepositions.

fer'nan-bag", 1 fer'nan-bag'; 2 fêr'nan-bāg", n. A sailor's small bag for tobacco; a pouch.

Fer-nan'do, Fer-nan'do, n. See FERDINAND.

Fer-nan'dez, 1 fer-nān'deth; 2 fêr-nān'dĕth, Juan (1600?). A Spanish pilot and navigator; discovered in 1536 the islands which bear his name. See JUAN FERNANDEZ.

Fer'nan-di'na, 1 fûr'nan-dī'nə; 2 fêr'nan-dī'na, n. A city, county-seat of Nassau county, Fla.

Fer-nan'do Ño-ro'nha, 1 fer-nān'do no-rō'nyo; 2 fer-nān'do no-rō'nyo. An island in the Atlantic ocean: lat. 3° 50' S., long. 32° W.; a penal settlement.

Fer-nan'do Po. A Spanish island in the Bay of Biafra, W. Africa; 771 sq. m.; a place of exile for political offenders.

Fer-nān, n. [Fr.] See FERDINAND.

fern'er-y, 1 fûrn'er-i; 2 fêrn'er-y, n. [-ies, 1 -iz; 2 -is, pl.] A place in which ferns are grown.

Fer'ney', Fer'ney', Patriarch, or Old Man of. A sobriquet of Voltaire, from Ferney, his place of residence, later known as Ferney-Voltaire.

Fer'ney'-Vol'taire' or Fer'ney', n. A village in the department of Ain, France, practically founded by Voltaire and his residence for 20 years; manufactures of watches and pottery.

fern'fleck"led, 1 fûrn'frek"ld; 2 fêrn'frĕk"ld, a. [Prov. Eng.] Freckled.

Fern Is'lands. See FARNE ISLANDS.

fern'sick, 1 fûrn'sik; 2 fêrn'sĭk, n. Same as STAGGERS.

fern'tic-le, 1 fûrn'tik-l; 2 fêrn'tĭc-l, n. [Prov. Eng.] A freckle: commonly in the plural. [< FERN, n.] fern'tic-led. See fern'fleckled, a. Freckled.

fern'y, 1 fûrn'i; 2 fêrn'y, a. Abounding in or resembling ferns.

fern'yer-ly, a. & n. The past year; a former year. II. adv. In the past year or years. fern'year", n.

fe-roc'i-ty, 1 fē-ros'i-ti; 2 fē-rŏs'ĭ-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tĭs, pl.] The state or quality of being ferocious; violent cruelty; fierceness; savageness.

fe'ro-cha'mæ, 1 fē'rō-kā'mē; 2 fē'rō-kā'mē, n. One of an order of tutelary deities among the ancient Persians. 2. A winged circular symbol supposed to represent such a deity, or the sun-god, found in Mesopotamian monuments. [< Zend fravashi.] fe-ro'nī-a, 1 fē-rō'ni-ə; 2 fē-rō'nĭ-a, n. [L.] Rom. Myth. An Italian goddess, patroness of markets and freedmen, having a temple at Capena from which her worship was introduced into Rome in the 3d century B. C. 2. Bot. A genus of flowering trees, native of southeastern Asia and belonging to the family Rutaceæ. The only species, F. elephantum, the East-Indian elephant-apple, or wood-apple, yields the East-Indian gum arabic. Both leaves and fruits have medicinal properties.

ferr-, prefix. Termination signifying yielding or bearing; as, ferriferous. [< L. ferre, bear.]

Fer-ro'zan-bad', 1 fi-rō'zə-bād'; 2 fē-rō'za-bād', n. A town in Persia, district, Bengal, in India.

Fer'roze-pur', 1 fi'rōz-pu͝r'; 2 fē'rŏz-pu͝r', n. 1. A district in the Punjab, British India; 2,692 sq. m. 2. Its capital.

Fer-ro'ze-shah, 1 fē-rō'zē-shä'; 2 fē-rō'ze-shä, n. A town in the Punjab, British India: scene of a severe battle between the English and the natives, Dec. 21–22, 1845.

Fer-ran'do, n. [It.] See FERDINAND.

Fer'rar, 1 fer'ər; 2 fĕr'ar, n. 1. Nicholas (2/11592–11/11637), an English Arminian divine; founded a nunnery; denounced in his day as a Romanizer. 2. Robert (before 1512–7/11555), an English prelate and martyr; burned in the reign of Mary I.

Fer-ra'ra, 2. A province in Emilia, Italy; 1,012 sq. m. 3. Its capital, an archiepiscopal city; contained a cathedral, castle, university, etc.; residence of Ariosto; here Tasso was imprisoned.

Fer'ra-ra'ese, 1 fer'ə-rä'ēz or -rēs'; 2 fĕr'a-rē' or -rēş', a. Pertaining to Ferrara, or to the Ferrarese, famous for its archæology, its university (A. D. 1264), and its associations with Tasso, Ariosto, and Savonarola.

Fer'ra-rese', n. sing. & pl. A native or inhabitant of Ferrara, or the inhabitants of Ferrara.

Fer-ra'ri, 1 fe-rär'i; 2 fĕ-rä'rē. 1. Giuseppe (3/11812–7/21876), an Italian philosopher and historian. 2. Lodovico (7/11522–1565), an Italian mathematician; discovered the method of treating biquadratic equations. 3. Luigi (1821–9/11894), an Italian sculptor and educator. 4. Paolo (1/11822–3/11889), an Italian dramatist; Goldoni, etc.

fer'ra-ry, n. Same as FERRARY.

fer'ra'te, 1 fer'āt; 2 fĕr'āt, n. Chem. A salt of ferric acid. [< L. ferrum, iron.]

fer'ra-tin, 1 fer'ə-tin; 2 fĕr'a-tĭn, n. Chem. A ferric nuclein found in the liver. It resembles hæmatine and is probably identical with it. [< L. ferrum, iron.]

ferr'ay, n. adv. Farther. — fer'ther.

Fer're-i'ra, 1 fer'ē-i'rə; 2 fĕr'ē-ī'ra, Antonio (1528–1569). A Portuguese poet and dramatist.

fer-rel'ro, 1 fe-rēl'rō; 2 fĕ-rĕl'ro, n. Zool. A tree-frog (Hyla faber) of Brazil, having a croak sounding like a blow upon copper. Its eggs are laid in mud and shallow water. [< Pg. ferreiro, blacksmith, < L. ferrum, iron.]

Fer'rel, 1 fer'el; 2 fĕr'ĕl, William (1/11817–9/11891). An American meteorologist; Treatise on Winds, etc.

fer're-ous, 1 fer'i-us; 2 fĕr'ē-ŭs, a. Pertaining to, made of, or like iron. [< L. ferreus, < ferrum, iron.] fer're-an.

Fer'rer, 1 fer'ər; 2 fĕr'er, Francisco (1/11859–10/11909). 1. A Spanish liberal educator; founder of over 100 modern schools; shot as a revolutionist by the government. 2. Rafael (1570–1611), a Spanish missionary and explorer.

Fer-re'ras, 1 fe-rē'rəs; 2 fĕ-rē'ras, Don Juan de (4/11652–1/11735). A Spanish ecclesiastic; historian; philosopher.

Fer'rers, 1 fer'ərz; 2 fĕr'ers, George (1512–1/1579). An English lawyer; poet; member of Parliament. His arrest when going to the house led to the first assertion by Parliament of the exemption of members from arrest for debt during a session. Fer'rarz.

fer'ret, 1 fer'et; 2 fĕr'ĕt, v. I. t. To pursue into and drive out of a hidden retreat, as a ferret does a rat; find by keen and persevering search: commonly with out; as, to ferret out wrongdoers.

Though a young man, I have ferreted out evidence, got up cases, and seen lots of life. DICKENS Bleak House ch. 9, p. 162. [E. & L.]

2. To hunt with ferrets; as, to ferret rabbits. 3. [Rare.] To search, as a house.

II. i. To hunt by means of ferrets; search; worry. [< F. furet, < furet; see FERRET, n.] — fer'ret-er, n.

fer'ret, n. 1. A weasel-like or musteline carnivore, a domesticated albinistic variety of the European polecat (Putorius fœtidus), by some regarded as a separate species (P. furo) of African origin. It is about 14 inches long, usually white or yellowish-white, with red eyes, and is used to drive rabbits, etc., out of their holes and to destroy rats and other vermin.

Ferret.

2. A related species; as, the black-footed ferret (Putorius nigripes) of the western United Iron. which preys upon prairie-dogs, etc. 3. In glass-making, an iron rod used for trying the melted material and for forming the ring about the mouth of a bottle. [< F. furet, < LL. furetus, < L. fur, thief.] fer'reter; fer'rit. — fer'ret-y, a. — fer'ret-eye', n. The spur-winged goose (Plectropterus gambensis).— hob ferret, see HOB², 1 (3).

fer'ret, n. 1. Narrow worsted or cotton ribbon for binding, making cockades, etc.; formerly, similar ribbon or tape of silk. 2. Flossesilk. [< It. fioretto, < L. floretus; see FLORET.] fer'ret-ing.

Fer'rex, 1 fer'eks; 2 fĕr'ĕks, n. See GORBODUC.

fer'ri-age, 1 fer'i-j; 2 fĕr'ĭ-aj, n. 1. The act or occupation of ferrying; conveyance by ferry. 2. The charge for ferrying. 3. Ferry accommodations or service. fer'ry-age.

fer'ric, 1 fer'ik; 2 fĕr'ĭc, a. 1. Pertaining to, containing, or obtained from iron. 2. Chem. Of or pertaining to iron in its higher valence. Iron in the ferric state enters into combination as a triad radical. Compare FERROUS. [< L. ferrum, iron.]

— ferric acid, an unisolated acid (H_2FeO_4) known to exist by its salts, the ferrates.— f. chlorid (Chem.), a dark-green, vitreous compound (Fe_2Cl_6), obtained by uniting iron with chlorin by heat, or by treating ferrous chlorid with aqua regia. It forms, in solution, with ammonia, double salts of four, five, seven, and twelve molecules respectively, to form hydrates.— f. hydroxid (Chem.), one of various compounds of ferric iron, hydrogen, and oxygen ($Fe_2(OH)_6$), obtained as a gelatinous precipitate upon adding ammonia to a ferric chlorid solution: occurs in brown hematite and also in iron-rust.— f. inductance, an inductance a portion of the magnetic flux of which passes through iron, and which is, therefore, variable in magnitude.— f. nitrosulfate (Chem.), a compound used in tanning: obtained by mixing green vitriol with nitric acid.— f. oxid, iron sesquioxid (Fe_2O_3); hematite.— f. salts, salts of ferric iron.— f. sulfate (Chem.), a compound of iron ($Fe_2(SO_4)_3$) uniting with nine molecules of water in the form of colorless crystals: used alone or as iron alum in tanning and dyeing.— f. sulfocyanate, a dark-red crystalline compound: used in reactions to show the presence of ferric iron.

fer'ri-cy-an'ic, 1 fer'i-si-an'ik; 2 fĕr'ĭ-cy-ăn'ĭc, a. Chem. Of or pertaining to a compound of iron in its higher valence and cyanogen. Compare FERROCYANIC. [< L. ferrum, iron, + CYANIC.] fer'ri'-an-o'gen, 1 fer'i-an'o-jen; 2 fĕr'ĭ-ăn'o-jĕn, fer'ricyan'ic acid (Chem.), a brown-ish-green crystalline astringent compound ($H_3Fe(CN)_6$) formed by decomposing ferricyanids.

fer'ri-cy'a-nid, 1 fer'i-si'ə-nid, -nid or -nid, n. Same as fer'ri-cy'a-nide, 1 cy'ə-nid, -nid or -nid, n. Chem. A salt of ferricyanic acid; ferriprussiate.— potassium ferricyanid, a deep-red crystalline compound ($K_3Fe(CN)_6$) formed by oxidizing potassium ferrocyanid. It is the ordinary form of the ferricyanids. fer'ri-cy'a-nate'.

fer'ri-cy-an'o-gen, 1 fer'i-si-an'o-jen; 2 fĕr'ĭ-cy-ăn'o-jĕn, n. Chem. A hypothetical radical ($Fe_2(CN)_6$), compounded of iron in its higher valence and cyanogen. [< L. ferrum, iron, + CYANOGEN.] fer'ri-cy-an'o-gen'.

fer'ri-er'i, n. A ferryman.

Fer'ri-er, 1 fer'i-ər; 2 fĕr'ĭ-er, n. 1. James Frederick (6/18 1808–4/11 1864), a Scotch philosopher; chair in St. Andrews. 2. Susan Edmunstone (7/11782–11/11854), a Scottish novelist; Marriage, etc.

fer'ri-lu'tite, 1 fer'i-lū'tīt; 2 fĕr'ĭ-lū'tīt, n. Mineral. A rock composed of hardened mud which contains iron.

fer'rin, 1 fer'in; 2 fĕr'ĭn, n. A brown pigment found in the digestive gland of some invertebrate animals; it contains a percentage of iron. [< L. ferrum, iron.]

fer'ring, n. Same as FERRYING.

fer'ri-prus'si-ate, n. [Rare.] Same as FERRICYANID.— fer'ri-prus'sic, a. [Rare.] Same as FERRICYANIC.

fer'ri-py'rin, 1 fer'i-pai'rin; 2 fĕr'ĭ-pī'rĭn, n. Chem. An antipyretic compound, ($C_{13}H_{11}NSO$)$_3$$Fe_2Cl_6$, formed by the combination of ferric chlorid and antipyrin: used as a remedy in anæmia. fer'ri-py'rine; fer'ro-py'rin.

fer'rite, 1 fer'eit; 2 fĕr'ĭt, n. 1. Petrol. Indeterminable red-dish decomposition products in altered igneous rocks, usually consisting of hydrous iron oxid. 2. Chem. Any compound, such as franklinite (zinc ferrite), considered as a derivative of the ferric hydroxid $Fe_2O_3(OH)_3$. 3. Metal. Pure metallo-iron constituent in iron and steel. Through the microscope it appears as a white mass or network when highly polished steel is etched with nitric acid. [< L. ferrum, iron.]

fer'ri-ti-za'tion, 1 fer'i-ti-zā'shən; 2 fĕr'ĭ-tĭ-zā'shon, n. Geol. Metamorphic alteration of other material into ferrite.

fer-ru'gi-nous, 1 fe-rū'ji-nus; 2 fĕ-rū'jĭ-nŭs, a. [Rare.] Iron-eating. [< L. ferrum, iron, + -NOUS, denouz.] fer'ro-, 1 fer'o-; 2 fĕr'o-. From Latin ferrum, iron; a combining form, denoting (1) derivation from or composition with iron; (2) specif., the presence of iron in the ferrous condition.

Words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical order, either singly or in groups.

fer'to, n. [It.] The iron prow of a gondola.

It is said that the ferro was introduced as a measure to allow the gondolier to judge whether or not he can pass under any particular bridge . . . Much more probably the ferri were added for ornament and nothing more.

H. F. Brown Life on the Lagoons p. 78. [MACM. 1894.]

Fer'ro, n. An island in the Canary Islands, 100 sq. m.; capital, Valverde; longitude 17° 40′ W.; its meridian is advocated by some as the prime meridian.

Ferro.

fer'ro-al'loy, n. A crude alloy which contains iron and a considerable amount of one or more other metals. fer'ro-al'u-mi'num, n. An alloy made of iron and aluminum: used in casting steel. fer'ro-al'u-min'i-um, n. fer'ro-bo'ron, n. An alloy of iron and boron: used in making a special steel. fer'ro-bronze', n. A dark bronze containing a percentage of iron; gun-metal.—fer'ro-cal'cite, n. Mineral. A variety of calcite containing ferrous carbonate.

fer'ro-car'ril, [< ferro- + carril, q. v. Sp.] n. A railroad.

fer'ro-chrome, n. An alloy of iron and chromium: used in the production of especially hard steel. fer'ro-chro'mi-um, n. fer'ro-cy'halt-ide, n. A form of cobaltite containing much iron. fer'ro-co'balt-ine, n. fer'ro-con'crete, n. Same as ARMORED CONCRETE. See CONCRETE.—fer'ro-cy'a-nate, n. Chem. Same as FERROCYANID.

fer'ro-cy-an'ic, 1 fer-ō-cī-ăn'ĭk; 2 fĕr-ō-cȳ-ăn'ĭc, a. Chem. Of or pertaining to a compound of iron in its lower valence and cyanogen. Compare FERRICYANIC.

fer'ro-cy'a-nid. 1 fer'ō-sī'ă-nĭd, -nid or -nĭd, n. 2 fĕr'-ō-cȳ'a-nĭd, -nid or -nĭd, n. Chem. A salt of ferrocyanic acid; ferrocyanate.

—potassium ferrocyanid, a yellow crystalline substance ($K_4Fe(CN)_6$) formed by heating together potash, iron, and horn, leather, etc. It is used in the manufacture of cyanogen compounds. It forms with iron salts a deep-blue precipitate of iron ferrocyanid, or Prussian blue.—fer'ro-cy-an'o-gen, n. The radical ($Fe(CN)_6$) occurring in ferrocyanic acid and the ferrocyanids.

fer'ro-dol'o-mite, n. Mineral. A dolomite containing a noteworthy amount of iron: intermediate between dolomite and siderite.—fer'ro-fer'ric, a. Ferrosesquiferric.—fer'ro-gal'lic, a. Designating a photographic process or sensitized paper for which a solution of gelatin, ferric sulfate, ferric chlorid, and tartaric acid is used as a developer. After a print after printing by sunlight is developed in a gallic-acid solution, producing a black-and-white print.—fer'ro-glass', n. Wire-glass.—fer'ro-gyn'ite, n. A form of sphalerite containing ferrous sulfate.—fer'ro-in-clave', n. Arch. Corrugated sheet iron or sheet steel: used as a construction base for cement or plaster.

fer'ro-lite, 1 fer'ō-lait; 2 fĕr'ō-lit, n. A rock composed largely of iron.

fer'ro-mag-ne'sian, 1 fer'ō-mag-nī'şan; 2 fĕr'ō-măg-nē'şhan, a. Mineral. Relating to minerals or rocks rich in iron and magnesium.

fer'ro-mag-net'ic, 1 fer'ō-mag-net'ĭk; 2 fĕr'ō-măg-nĕt'ic. I. a. 1. Acting in a magnetic field as or like iron; also, extremely magnetic. 2. Formerly, paramagnetic: opposed to diamagnetic. II. n. A substance that acts in this way, as iron, steel, nickel, or cobalt. [< L. ferrum, iron, + MAGNETIC.] —fer'ro-mag'ne-tism, n.

fer'ro-man'ga-nese, 1 fer'ō-mang'ga-nīz; 2 fĕr'ō-măng'ga-nēs, n. An alloy of iron and manganese, containing over 25 per cent. of manganese and being rich in carbon. It is used in making Bessemer steel. [< L. ferrum, iron, + MANGANESE.]

fer'ro-me'ter, n. Physics. An instrument for determining the percentage of iron in the blood.—fer'ro-mo-lyb'de-num, n. An alloy of iron and molybdenum: used in the manufacture of especial steel.—fer'ro-na'trite, n. Mineral. A stalactic, whitish-green, hydrous ferric sulfate ($H_2 Na_2 FeS_2 O_{10}$), crystallizing in the hexagonal system.—fer'ro-nick'el, n. An alloy of iron and nickel containing over 25 per cent. of nickel and being free from carbon.—fer'ro-pal'i-dite, n. A white ferrous sulfate found in a granular state in conjunction with roemerite.—fer'ro-pro'tein, n. A nitrogenized substance that has a basic radical containing iron.—fer'ro-prus'si-ate, n. Ferrocyanid.—ferroprussiate paper, see BLUE-PAPER, under BLUE.—fer'ro-prus'side, a. Same as FERROCYANIC.—fer'ro-pyr'in, n. Chem. Ferripyrin.—fer'ro-sil'i-con, n. fer'ro-sil'i-con, Chem. A compound of silicon and iron added to iron when molten, to increase the proportion of silicon. [W] fer'ro-'so, 1 fer'ō-'sō; 2 fĕr-ō-'sō-. Same as FERRO-: a combining form.

fer'ro-so-fer'ric, 1 fer'ō-sō-fer'ĭk; 2 fĕr'ō-sō-fĕr'ic, a. Chem. Of or pertaining to a combination of a ferrous with a ferric compound; as, ferrosoferric oxid, black or magnetic oxid of iron ($FeO.Fe_2O_3$ or Fe_3O_4) found native.

A sesquioxid of iron, or peroxid of iron, the water of which is decomposed, hydrogen is not free, and the iron is oxidized to the condition of ferrosoferric oxide. W. M. WILLIAMS Chem. of Iron and Steel Making, p. 6. [LOND. 1880.]

fer'ro-stib'i-an, n. Mineral. A submetallic black manganese and iron antimonite, which crystallizes in the monoclinic system.—fer'ro-tel'lu-rite, n. Mineral. A yellow iron tellurate ($FeTeO_3$), that is found in minute prismatic crystals.—fer'ro-ti-ta'ni-um, n. A crude alloy made of iron and titanium: used in the manufacture of steel and in making chilled iron castings.—fer'ro-tung'sten, n. An alloy of iron and tungsten: used in the manufacture of tool-steel for rapid working (hardness 9 on the scale).

fer'ro-type, 1 fer'ō-taip; 2 fĕr'ō-tȳp, n. A photograph taken on a sensitized film supported on a thin sheet of enameled iron; a tintype. [< L. ferrum, iron, + -TYPE.]

fer'rous, 1 fer'us; 2 fĕr'ŭs, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or obtained from iron. 2. Specif., in chemistry, of or pertaining to iron combined in its lower valence, where its combining power is bivalent, as in ferrous chlorid ($FeCl_2$). Compare FERRIC. [< L. ferrum, iron.]—ferrous carbonate (Chem.), a compound ($FeCO_3$) precipitated as a white solid, uniting readily with the free oxygen of the air; also found as a mineral. See SIDERITE.—f. chlorid (Chem.), a compound ($FeCl_2$) obtained in the form of white crystalline residue by the action of hydrochloric acid gas upon heated iron. It forms green transparent crystals by uniting with four molecules of water.—f. compound, a compound of iron in its lower state.—f. hydroxid (Chem.), a gelatinous compound ($Fe(OH)_2$), of a pale green color, precipitated by the action of an alkali with a ferrous salt solution; it becomes a ferric hydroxid of brown color by uniting with free oxygen.—f. oxalate, an exsiccate of iron (FeC_2O_4) used by photographers. It is found in conjunction with humboldtite and lignite.—f. oxid (Chem.), a compound (FeO) obtained in the form of a gray powder by the action of hydrogen upon ferric oxid.—f. sulfate (Chem.), a compound ($FeSO_4$) or, in its crystallized form ($FeSO_4.7H_2O$), which unites with free oxygen to form ferric sulfate. See COPPERAS.—f. sulfid (Chem.), a compound (FeS) formed either as a black solid precipitated by the action of an iron salt solution with an alkaline sulfid, or as a brittle solid from the union of sulfur and iron under heat; a source of hydrogen sulfid.

fer'ro-va-na'di-um, 1 fer'ō-vo-nē'di-um; 2 fĕr'ō-va-nā'dĭ-ăm, n. An alloy of iron and vanadium: used in the manufacture of a special steel.

Fer-ruck'a-bad', n. Same as FARUKHABAD.

fer'ru-gi-nate, 1 fe-rū'ji-nēt; 2 fe-rū'gi-nāt, vt. [-NAT'ED; -NAT'ING.] To impregnate with iron; to render rust-red, as rock or soil.—fer'ru'gi-nat'ed, a. Having the color or nature of iron-rust.—fer'ru'gi-na'tion, n. Geol. The state or process of being permeated with iron-rust or with rust-colored iron ore.

fer'ru-gi-nous, 1 fe-rū'ji-nus; 2 fĕ-rū'gi-nŭs, a. 1. Containing or having the nature of iron. 2. Rust-colored; brownish-red or yellowish-red. [< L. ferruginus, < ferrugo, iron-rust, < ferrum, iron.] fer'ru-gin'e-ant; fer'ru-gin'e-ous; [Rare]. [now used.

fer'rule, 1 fer'il or -ul; 2 fĕr'il or -ŭl, n. 1. A metal ring or cap on the end of a cane, handle of a tool, post, or the like, to strengthen or protect it. 2. A bushing or thimble inserted in the end of a boiler-flue or the like, to spread it and make a tight joint. 3. A short pipe coupling. 4. The frame of a skate. 5. Mech. In a bow drill, the metal ring which holds the socket of the bow is wound in order to rotate it. 6. Metal. In an electric furnace, the watercooled metallic tube coiled about the carbon electrode. [< F. virole, < LL. virola, ring, < L. viriae, bracelet.]—fer'rule-bind'er, n. A machine for putting on ferrules.—f.-ring, n. A ring united to a ferrule which forms the end of a neck-yoke.

fer'ru-ne-ate, 1 fe-rū'nē-ēt; 2 fĕ-rū'nē-āt, a. [Rare.]

fer'ry, 1 fer'i; 2 fĕr'ȳ, v. [FER'RIED; FER'RY-ING.] I. t. 1. To convey on a boat or a float across a body (usually narrow) of water, as a river. 2. To cross in a boat or the like. 3. To cross a stream or other body of water, as in a boat or on a raft. [< AS. ferian, carry, go, caus. of faran, go; cp. Goth. farjan, go by ship, sail.]

fer'ry, n. [-RIES, 1-ız; 2 -ĭz, pl.] 1. An organization or system for the regular transportation of passengers and goods across a stream or body of water. 2. The legal right to maintain such an establishment and to charge toll. 3. The place where boats cross, or where their passengers embark; as, to wait at the ferry. 4. A boat, especially a small boat, for conveying passengers across a narrow water; a ferry-boat; wherry.

—aerial ferry, a ferry-bridge that transports traffic across a river or gorge at the level of the roadway on a platform depending from a trolley, which travels across a bridge-span set between two end-towers at an elevation that will not obstruct navigation.—ferry-boat', n. 1. A boat usually carrying a deck, for conveying passengers and goods or things across a body of water between opposite shores. 2. [Local, Eng.] A large boat used at Yarmouth to land cargoes from ships anchored in the roads.—f.-bridge, n. [U. S.] The floating-platform of a ferry; usually hinged to the wharf and adjusted at the outer end to suit the level of the boat's deck. 2. A bridge for the transportation of wagons.—f.-cable, n. [W. U. S.] A flat-bottomed ferry-boat.—f.-house, n. 1. The dwelling of a ferryman. 2. The house upon a ferry-pier or landing for the accommodation of passengers and protection of goods free from charge.—fer'ry-man, n. [-MEN, pl.] One who has charge of a ferry.—f.-master, n. 1. An overseer of a ferry. 2. A collector of tolls at a ferry.

Fer'ry, 1 fer'i; 2 fĕr'ȳ, Jules (4/1832–3/11893). A French lawyer; statesman; twice premier.

Fer'ry-ville, 1 fer'i-vil, n. Same as TAYPORT.

fers†, a. Fierce.

ferst, n. In chess, the queen; also, a pawn when queened.—the ferses, the pieces, on the pieces on one side except the king, each of the pairs, bishops, knights, and castles being considered as one.

Fer'sen, 1 fer'sen; 2 fĕr'sĕn, 1. Fredrik Axel, Graf von (1719–1794), Swedish statesman and historian. 2. Hans Axel, Graf von (1755–6/1810), a Swedish soldier and statesman; commanded the Royal Swedes with the French forces in the American war; accused of poisoning the Swedish crown prince and killed by a mob in Stockholm; his innocence was afterward established.

Fer'ti'Ma'Ce', La, 1 la fer'ti' ma'-se'; 2 lä fĕr'tē' mä'-sē', [Sp.] n. A seaport town in Buenos Ayres province, Argentina.

fer'tile, 1 fĕr'til; 2 fĕr'tĭl (XIII), a. 1. Producing or fer'tĭle,) capable of producing abundantly; fruitful or prolific; rich; productive; inventive; as, a person fertile in suggestion; a mind fertile in inventive or imparting productiveness; as, fertile rains. 3. Produced abundantly; plentiful. 4. Bot. (1) Bearing or capable of producing fruit. (2) Capable of fertilizing or of being fertilized, as perfect anthers or pistils. (3) Producing or capable of bearing organs: said of ferns and other cryptogamous plants. 5. Reproducing or capable of reproducing by sexual generation; as, the horse and the ass are fertile inter se. 6. Capable of growth or development; productive: said of seeds or eggs. 7. Biol. Impregnated; pregnant; said of the queen bee after the nuptial flight. (2) Capable of laying eggs; said of a workerbee. Eggs laid by workers always produce drones. [F., < L. fertilis, < ferre, bear.] Syn.: exuberant, fecund, fruitful, luxuriant, productive, prolific, rich, teeming.—Prov. fr.—fer'til (e-lye, fer'til-yt, ads.

fer-til'i-fate, vt. Same as FERTILIZE.

fer-til'i-ty, 1 fer-til'i-ti; 2 fer-tĭl'i-ty, n. 1. The state or quality of being fertile or of producing fruit, etc., in abundance; fruitfulness; as, the fertility of land or meadows. 2. Richness of invention; abundance of resource; quickness; readiness; as, fertility of intellect.

Richardson's . . . fertility of invention . . . is wonderful. CRAIK Eng. Lit. and Lang., The Novelist vol. ii, p. 279. [o. n. a. o. 1864.]

3. Econ. The capacity of land for production under favorable circumstances; used either of the climatic and soil conditions only, or of these added to the local conditions, as nearness to market, etc. [< F. fertilité, < L. fertilita(t)-s, < fertilis; see FERTILE.] fer'til(e-ness†.

fer'til-i-za'tion, 1 fĕr'til-i-zā'shŏn; 2 fĕr'tĭl-i-zā'shŏn, n. 1. The act or process of fertilizing or rendering productive.

Having been subjected to artificial fertilization . . . plants have developed a hitherto undreamed beauty of blossom and of fruit. Lovell Microscopy (r. by Hamilton and Jones, vol. i, bk. i, ch. 1, p. 19. [s. & w. 1887.]

2. Biol. The fusion of two gametes or of a male cell, called spermatozoid, sperm, or antherozoid, with an egg. The egg, the female cell, usually retains the structure of an embryonic cell, but the male cell is greatly modified. Fertilization should be distinguished from insemination (in animals) and from pollination (in plants). The essential characteristic of fertilization is the combining of the nuclei of the two cells. Parthenogenesis occurs in some of the lower animals, as the rotifers, and in some plants, as the cultivated banana. But for the vast majority of animals and plants fertilization is necessary to preserve vigor. In plants the pollen-tubes convey to the ovule not only the indispensable nucleus, but also the cytoplasm and the centrosome—the latter body being a minute corpuscle that appears to be needed for the segmentation which follows and with which all development begins. Chemical stimulus has been successfully used to effect a pseudofertilization in the eggs of certain lower animals, notably sea-urchins, but it is probable that the chemical employed is a quaternary compound usually. After fertilization the egg divides into two cohering parts, each of which is a cell like the egg. These two divide in turn to form four, eight, sixteen, and so on—more or less regularly—until the egg has split up into the multitude of cells that make the body.

—artificial fertilization. 1. In bee-culture, the impregnation of queens while in a state of confinement, or by mechanical means. 2. Bot. & Zool. The achievement of fertilization by artificial means, as by placing the pollen of a flower upon the stigma, or by bringing the male cells of a fish in contact with ripe ova. 3. The artificial initiation of the process of development in an unfertilized egg by some other means than through the agency of the male cell, as exemplified in the treatment of the eggs of the sea-urchin with a dilute solution of magnesium chlorid; in sea-water, or by brushing the eggs with silkworm. The results thus obtained are, however, open to doubt, and may merely be produced by the working of the organic mechanism of the egg due to the disturbance of its quiescence, and not necessarily in a manner analogous to fertilization by the male.—asymmetrical f., the differing of individuals as regards inherited parental characteristics, so that no individual is exactly like either in the second generation or in later generations: a fact thought to prove the formation of unit characters, or allelomorphs, from gametes.—close f., the application of the pollen of a flower to its own stigma.—cross-f., same as STAMP FERNERY. —fetal circulation, the circulation of the blood in the fetus. In mammals the venous blood enters the placenta by the umbilical arteries of the fetus and returns purified and oxygenated by the umbilical vein, reaching the inferior vena cava through the liver or the ductus venosus; only a small supply goes to the lungs, which are inactive before birth. The current from the inferior cava is therefore diverted when it reaches the heart, passing from the right to the left auricle through an opening in the septum, the foramen ovale. The blood entering the heart by the superior cava passes into the right ventricle and thence into the pulmonary artery, but a considerable part is then diverted to a passage, the ductus arteriosus, by which it is led directly to the aorta.—f. envelops, or membranes, membranous sacs, the chorion, amnion, and allantois, that form a covering around the fetus until birth.—f. inclusion, an abnormal fetus enclosed partly or wholly in another fetus. the Coast Coyote People, or Prey-brother Priesthood, of the Zuñi Indians.

Fetishism is a form of worship regarded as in itself superhumanly powerful in directing or assisting to the attainment of some desired end. The use of the word as denoting a religious cult goes back to C. de Brosses (1760) who rightly supposed that certain customs of the Africans constituted a form of primitive religion. The Portuguese term feitiço is the name given to beads, medals, and crucifixes carried by sailors and supposed by them to afford protection . . . and was applied to the fetishes of the Africans by these same sailors from whom Dr. Brosses obtained it. . . . The term has been used very loosely. Comte made fetishism equivalent to animism. Lippert meant by it the embodiment of departed spirits in some tangible or visible object. GROSJEAN GILMORE in New Schaff-Herzog Relig. Encyc. vol. iv, p. 305.

3. Unreasoning devotion to any object, idea, or belief; superstition. fe'tich-ism†; fe'tī-cism†, n. —fe'tish-eer', n. [Rare.] A fetish-man; also, a fetish. fe'tish-er†, —fe'tish-ist, n. A worshiper of fetishes. fe'tich-ist'ic, —fe'tish-is'tic, a. Belonging to or marked by fetishism; profoundly superstitious. fe'tish-ī†; fe-tish'ī†; fe'tich-ist†; fe'tich-ī'tist. —fe'tish-ry, n. [Rare.] A single fetish or collection of fetishes.

fet'lock, 1 fet'lok; 2 fĕt'lŏk, n. 1. The tuft of hair borne on the projection of a horse's foot above the hoof at the fetlock-joint; also, the projection that bears the tuft. See MANE. 2. The fetlock-joint. —f.-joint, the joint, fastened to a fore and a hind leg just above the hoofs. [< fet- (pp. FOOT) + LOCK², n., or (def. 3) LOCKS, n.] —fet'-lock-shoot', n. A protective covering for the fetlock of a horse, as against injury from overreaching. [< f.-joint, n. The joint of a horse's foot between the metacarpal or cannon-bone and the great pastern or fetter-bone. —fet'locked, a. Having fetlocks, or having a topple fastened to the fetlock; hence, hampered or fettered.

fet'low, 1 fet'lo; 2 fĕt'lo, n. A disease of the foot in cattle; a felon or whitlow. [Cor. of WHITLOW.]

fe'tor, 1 fē'tor; 2 fē'tŏr, n. [L.] A powerful, offensive odor; stench. fe'tor†; fe'tor‡.

fet'ter, 1 fet'er; 2 fĕt'er, vt. 1. To fasten fetters upon; bind or restrain with fetters; shackle; hence, to impose restraint on; hamper; confine.

Fetter not commerce, sir — let her be as free as air. IRENE in WIFE Patrick Henry p. 265. [D. & t. 1859.]

2†. To iron, as a wheel; fit a tire. [< AS. fæteræian, < fæter, fetter.] Syn.: see BIND.— fet'ter-er, n.

fet'ter, n. A chain or shackle by which the feet of a person or of an animal are fastened together or to some fixed or heavy object, so as to hinder free movement; a shackle; hence, anything that checks, hampers, restrains, or confines. [< AS. fetor, shackle for the foot; cp. FOOT.]

It had employed Edward thirteen years to forge the fetters of Scotland: in less than six months Wallace set them free. LINGARD England vol. iii, p. 217. [s. c. 1827.]

Syn.: bonds, chains, gyves, handcuffs, irons, manacles, shackles. Bonds may be of cord, leather, or other substance that can bind; chains are of linked metal. Manacles and handcuffs are for the hands. Fetters for the feet; gyves and shackles may be for either. A shackle is a metallic ring, clasp, or bracelet-like fastening for encircling and restraining a limb: commonly one of a pair, used either for hands or feet. Bonds, fetters, and chains are used in a general way for almost any form of restraint or confinement; while poetic and the other words are mostly restricted to the literary style: handcuffs is the specific and irons the general term in popular usage; as, to put in irons. Bonds, fetters, chains, and shackles are frequently used metaphorically.

fet'ter-lock, 1 fet'er-lŏk; 2 fĕt'er-lŏk', n. The proximal or first phalanx or great pastern of a horse's foot; just below the fetlock. See HORSE.

feud, 1 fūd; 2 fūd, n. 1. Vindictive strife between persons or parties; a state of open enmity; animosity or bitter will. 2. Hostility or sanguinary conflict between families or clans, often continued for several generations, in revenge for injuries or murders; a blood-feud; vendetta. [ME. feide (eu for ei by influence of freend), < AS. fǽhth, < fah, hostile.] Syn.: animosity, animosity, bitterness, brawl, broil, contention, contest, controversy, dispute, dissension, enmity, fray, hostility, quarrel, strife. Dissention is used of a number of persons, of a party or other organization. Bitterness is in feeling only; enmity and hostility involve will and purpose to oppose or injure. A quarrel is in a word or act, or both, and is commonly slight and transient, as we speak of childish quarrels; contention, contest, and strife are always by some form of action. Contest is often used in a good sense, contention and strife very rarely so. Controversy is commonly in words; strife extends from verbal controversy to the contests of armies. An affray or broil may arise at a street corner; the affray always involves physical force; the broil or brawl may be confined to violent language. A feud is usually between families, clans, or parties, with acts of hostility mutually retaliated and avenged; feud is rarely used of individuals, never of nations. While all the other words of this group may refer to that which is transient, a feud is longstanding, and often hereditary.— Prep.: the feud of or between the Montagues and the Capulets.— f. and gun, at enmity.— feud'ist, n. An assessment in the nature of a fine for being engaged in a quarrel or feud.

feud, n. Law. Land held of a superior on condition of rendering him service; the right of a vassal to the use and profits of land, or other immovable property of his lord, rendering the latter, as proprietor thereof, such duties or services as belonged to the particular tenure.

The land of a feud was bestowed by the lord to be held by him, albeit against his own kindred, when required, and against his sovereign.

F. H. HEDGE Essays, Feudal Society p. 105. [s. DROS. 1888.]

feu'dal, a. Law. 1. Relating to or of the nature of a feud or fee; as, a feudal tenure; feudal rights.

The v. s. fundamental maxim of all feudal tenure is this: that all lands were originally granted out by the sovereign, and are therefore holden . . . of his crown.

BLACKSTONE Commentaries bk. ii, p. 53.

2. Pertaining to the relation of lord and vassal; as, feudal service.

In every European code, the ages of feudal influences, of mercantile ambition, of the enfranchisement of the yeomanry, appear distinctly in succession.

HARRISON BURROWS United States vol. ii, p. 78. [s. n. & co. 1876.]

[< LL. feudalis, < feudum; see FEUD².] feud'al‡.

—feudal system, a political-social system in force throughout Europe for many centuries, founded on the tenure of lands, or fees, given as compensation for military services rendered by chiefs and by them subject by allotments to their subordinates and vassals in consideration of like service to the grantor, and which arose from conditions that resulted from the feudal tenure or relation. See FEUDALISM.

To the feudal system we owe the forms, to the church the substance of society.

f. g. f., abbr. Fully good, fair.

F. G. O., abbr. Fellow of the Guild of Organists.

F. G. S., abbr. Fellow of the Geological Society.

F. H., or f. h., abbr. (Pharm.) Fiat haustus (L.; let the draft be made); forehatch (Naut.).

f. h. p., abbr. Friendly horse-power.

F. H. S., abbr. Fellow of the Horticultural Society.

F. I., abbr. Falkland Islands.

f. i., abbr. For instance.

F. I. A., abbr. Fellow of the Institute of Actuaries.

fi-a'cre, 1 fi-ā'kr; 2 fē-ā'cr, n. [F.] A small four-wheeled public carriage; a French hackney - coach: named from the Rue de St. Fiacre, Paris, where the first station for these coaches was established about 1650.

Fiacre, with Woman Driver.

Fi'a-ma-met'ta, 1 fi'am-met'ə; 2 fī'am-met'ə, n. The lady beloved of Boccaccio, presumably Maria, natural daughter of Robert, king of Naples.

fian'gal'les, 1 fyən'gil'yz; 2 fyăn'gil'ye, n. pl. [F.] A betrothal; also, the act or ceremony of betrothing.

fi"an'cé', 1 fi'ən'sē'; 2 fi'ăn'cē', fem.) An affianced person.

The fiancé of Mademoiselle has arrived and amuses us very much. MISS ALCOTT in Mrs. Cheney's Louisa M. Alcott p. 221. [L. BROS. 1888.]

fian-chet'to, 1 fyən-kēt'tō; 2 fyăn-cēt'to, n. Chess. An opening in the close game. See CLOSE GAME, under CHESS. [L. dim. of fianco, flank.]

Flan'na, 1 fī'nə; 2 fī'nə, n. See under FENIAN, n., 2.

fias-chet'to, 1 fyəs-kēt'to; 2 fyăs-cēt'to, n. [-TI, 1 -tē; 2 -tē, pl.] [It.] 1. A small delicate glass bottle with covering of wicker, plaited straw, or maize-leaves. 2. [Rare.] A small vessel of earthenware, oddly shaped and decorated.

fias-chi'no, 1 fyəs-kī'no; 2 fyăs-cī'no, n. [-NI, 1 -ni; 2 -nī, pl.] [It.] An Italian variety of fine Chianti.

fi-as'co, 1 fi-as'kō; 2 fī-as'co, n. [It.] 1. A complete or humiliating failure; especially, a failure of a performer, a play, or an opera to please an audience. 2. A flask; bottle; especially, a wicker-covered bottle.

This purple wine. Our straw-woven fiasco to fill.

W. W. STORY Giovanone st. 3.

fi'at, 1 fai'at; 2 fī'āt, n. [FIAT.] To decree authoritatively.

The homicide I fiated is doing.

AUBREY DE VERE Mary Tudor pt. ii, act v, sc. 5.

fi'at, n. 1. A positive and peremptory command that something be done; especially, an effective command, as from an irresistible or divine authority; as, the fiat of Omnipotence.

When Bismarck . . . uttered his fiat on the night of that eventful day [when a white tablecloth fluttered over the ramparts of Sedan . . . there was nothing left for Napoleon . . . to do but to surrender his army.

FRANK H. VIZETELLY in The New Age July, '10, p. 14.

2. Eng. Law. An order of court directing that a certain thing be done. [L., let it be done, 3d per. s. subj. pres. of fio, be done.] fiant; fiaunt†.

— fiat in bankruptcy, an order in chancery authorizing proceedings in bankruptcy.— f. money, irredeemable paper money made legal tender by law.— joint f. (Law), an order of court formerly issued by a judge against two or more trading partners.

fi'auncet†, n. [F.] Confidence; trust. CHAUCER R. R. 1. 481.

fib'l, 1 fib; 2 fĭb, v. [FIBBED; FIBS; FIB'BING.] [I. t. & i.] [Rare.] To speak falsely to; as, to fib a man. II. t. To tell the

You thought he felt guilty and was trying to fib out of it.

HOWELLS Dr. Breen's Practice ch. 6, p. 105. lo. & co. 1881.]

— fib'ber, n. One who tells fibs. fib'ster [Rare].— fib'ber-y, n. [Rare.] The habit of telling fibs.

fib's, n. [Slang.] I. t. To pummel with short, quick blows.

DR QUTLAND Essays on Phil. Writers vol. ii, p. 48. [L. & E. 1856.]

II. i. To give short, quick blows.

fib, n. I. An untruth told without evil intent; a harmless or venial deviation from truth; a lie: a softened expression for lie. 2. One who fibs. [Cor. of FABLE.]

fi'ber, 1 fai'bər; 2 fī'ber, n. 1. A fine filament; a slender thread or thread-like component of a substance, as of wood, muscle, connective tissue, or spun glass; an individual filament, as of wool or cotton, of which a tissue is composed of filaments. Especially: (1) Any substance that may be separated into threads for spinning, weaving, etc.; as, wool, cotton, flax, or hemp fiber; mineral fiber. (2) A lengthened bast-cell. (3) A filamentous root; also, a rootlet.

3. Mech. See VULCANIZED FIBER. 4. That which primarily constitutes or is the essence of anything; hence, nature; capacity; material; strength; nerve; as, a person of fine fiber. [< F. fibre, < L. fibra, fiber.] — associative fibers, fibers that connect the different parts of the same cerebral hemisphere.— commissural fibers, fibers that connect the different parts of the same cerebral hemisphere with corresponding parts of the opposite hemisphere.— Bahama fiber, the fiber obtained from Bahama hemp. See BAHAMA HEMP.— chromatic fiber. (Biol.) The thin filament formed by chromatin of the nucleus at the commencement of mitosis, afterward breaking up into chromosomes. chromatin thread; — cruda f., cellulose, as obtained from vegetables by chemical action with alkalis and acids.— fi'ber-cross", n. Same as CROSS-WIRE, 2.— f.-faced, a. Having fibers running across the grain.— f.-lining, n. Lining paper.— f. graphite, wood-fiber incorporated with graphite and drying-oil and used as a lubricant.— f.-gun, n. An apparatus for disintegrating vegetable fiber by subjecting it to prolonged action of steam, gun-cotton, or the like, and then, suddenly opening the vessel, throwing it into a receptacle, when the expansion accomplishes the desired result.— f. hemp, Same as SISAL GRASS OR HEMP, under GRASS OF CORT.— f. of Remak, a gray, non-medullated nerve-filament.— fibers of Müller, supporting filaments of neuroglia tissue.— fibers of Sharpey, the fibrous filamentous outgrowths from the periosteum that enter the exterior layers of bone.— f.-stitch, n. A pillow-lace stitch.— f.-tenacity, n. A form of vegetized fiber.— fibers of Tomes, (Anat.) nerve-fiber without a medullary sheath.— hard f., a stiff paper composition used for valves, for insulation in electrical work, and for other purposes; trade name.— interosseal fibers (Biol.), an aggregation of fine colorless fibers that forms the central rod or spindle during the process of cell-division, and that is enclosed in a mantle of fibers.— Nasmyth's f., same as ENAMEL CUTICLE, that which actuates muscle.— odontogenic fibers, a term proposed by Mummery to denote "the layer of connective tissue surrounding the pulp and entering into the substance of the matrix" of the dentine of a tooth.— oloná f., a strong, durable Hawaiian fiber obtained from the Touchardia latifolia.— pandanus-fiber obtained from the Freycinetia arnotiecinis of Hawaii.— Palmyra f., a coarse, wiry fiber derived from Borassus flabelliter, the Palmyra palm, and used in brush-making.— pontile fibers, fibers that belong to the pons Varolii.— postcommissural fibers, fibers of the posterior cerebral commissure that lie behind the pineal body and traverse the optic thalami.— postretinal fibers, a series of fibers that pass from the optic ganglion of the brain in insects to the different facets of the compound eye.— precommissural fibers, the fibers of the anterior commissure of the brain and in Lamina cinerea.— Purkinje's fibers, muscle-fibers of a gelatinous appearance found in the walls of the heart.— quartz f., a fiber made chemically by drawing out a piece of quartz rapidly when fused in the oxyhydrogen flame. They can be produced of extreme natural fineness and on account of their elasticity and strength are of great service in the more delicate parts of electrometers and other instruments.— Reissner's f., a fiber lying in the central canal of the spinal cord of lower vertebrates which runs through the entire length of the canal and joins the torus longitudinalis at the diencephalon.— short association fibers, fibers of the brain that join neighboring gyri.— spiral f., the inner spiral membrane which strengthens the trachea of insects and serves to hold them open.— Tampico f., same as IXTLE.— Tomes's fibers, extended and branched processes of the odontoblasts of the pulp, which fill the dentinal tubules of teeth.— vegetable f., the long narrow cells that compose the tissue of the wood and bark of plants.— vulcanized f., paper-pulp made tough and water-proof by treatment with a metallic chlorid, and pressure: used in making washers, bearings, etc.— Wellsmann's fibers, the enlarged muscular fibers seen in a muscular spindle, enclosed in a sheath of connective tissue and connected with a special nerve-fiber.

— fi'bered, a. Composed of fibers: having fibers. fi'bred,.— fi'ber-less, a. Free from fiber. fi'bre-less.— fi'ber-ose, n. [Rare.] A supposed modification of cellulose.

fi'berd, a. Fibered. S. S.

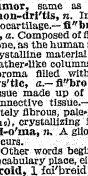
fi'bri-form, 1 fai'bri-fōrm; 2 fī'bri-fórm, a. Having a fibrous form or structure; resembling fiber.

fi'bril, 1 fai'bril; 2 fī'bril, n. A minute fiber or filament, as one of the longitudinal elements of muscular fiber. [< L. fibra, fiber.] fi-bril'la;— Tomes's fibrils, see TOMES'S FIBERS.— fi'bril'-a, n. A substitute for cotton made from certain delicate vegetable fibers.— fi'bril-lar, a. Of, pertaining to, or composed of fibers or fibrils. fi'bril-la-ry†; fi'bril-lous† (KIN).— fi'bril-late, vt. To cause to become fibrillar or fibrous.— fi'bril-late, a. Having a fibrous structure; provided with fibrils. fi'bril-lat"ed.— fi"bril-la'tion, n.— fi"bril-li'fer-ous, a. Fibril-bearing.— fi-bril'li-form, a. Having the form of fibrils.— fi'bril-lose, a. Provided with, composed of, or appearing like fine fibers.

fi'brin, 1 fai'brin; 2 fī'brin, n. Chem. 1. A white proteid compound obtained when blood is coagulated, as by whipping fresh blood with twigs and washing the clot. The gastric and pancreatic juices digest it readily.

The fibrin of the blood is increased in acute rheumatism more than in any other disease. FLINT Prin. and Pract. of Med. pt. ii, ch. 2, p. 317. [L. BROS. & CO. 1868.]

2. A nitrogenous white mass procured by washing out coloring-matter from lean meat; the fibrous portion of flesh. 3. A nitrogenous substance separated from cereal grains and other seeds, resembling animal fibrin. [< L. fibra, fiber.] fi'brinet.— fibrin antipeptone, antipeptone made from fibrin.— fi'brin-ate, n. Chem. A febrinogen and fibrinoplastin, which, by the action of the fibrin-ferment, combine to form fibrin.— f.-ferment, n. Same as FIBRINOGENIC.— f.-globulin, n. Globulin similar to globulin which coagulates at + 64° C. in blood-serum and in the serum from the transformation of fibrinogen into fibrin.— myosin-f., n. A coagulated albumin myosin in the insoluble state.— fi'bri-na'tion, n. Med. The coagulation of an excess of fibrin: said of the blood in some diseases.



fi'bri-no-, 1 fai'bri-no-; 2 fī'bri-no-. From FIBRIN, < French fibre, < L. fibra, fiber; a combining form denoting, especially in chemistry, the presence of fibrin.

— fi'bri-no-cel'lu-lar, a. Consisting of fibrin and a proportion of exfoliated cells.— fi-brin'o-gen, n. Chem. A proteid compound of the globulin group, found in the blood and other body-fluids, connected with the formation of fibrin and with coagulation.— fi'bri-no-ge-ne't'ic, a. Same as FIBRINOGENIC.— fi'bri-no-gen'ic, a. Of, related to, or having the nature of fibrinogen; as, a fibrinogenic substance.— fi'brin-og'e-nous, a. Having the properties of fibrinogen; forming fibrin.— fi'bri-no-gob'u-lin, n. Chem. Globulin formed from fibrinogen during coagulation, or while the fibrinogen is being transformed into fibrin.

— fi'bri-no-ple'sti-a, n. Same as FIBRINOPLASTIN.— fi'bri-no-plas'tic, a. Of, pertaining to, or having its nature.— fi'bri-no-plas'tin, n. A solid proteid of the group of globulins, extracted from the blood and connected with the process of coagulation; paraglobulin.— fi'bri-no-pu'ri-an, a. Denoting conditions liable to inflammation that are liable to coagulate and which contain pus.— fi'bri-nose, n. The albumose that is produced from fibrin.— fi'bri-no'sis, n. Pathol. A condition due to an abnormal proportion of fibrin in the blood.— fi'bri-nous (KIN), a. Composed of the properties, characteristics, or nature of fibrin.

fi'bri-nu'ri-a, 1 fai'bri-nū'ri-ə: 2 fī'bri-nū'ri-a, n. Med. Chyluria that exhibits a spontaneous coagulation of the urine. < L. fibra, fiber, + Gr. ouron, urine.]

fi'bro-, 1 fai'bro-; 2 fī'bro-. From Latin fibra, fiber: a combining form. fi-bro'so-,— fi'bro-ad'e-no'ma, n. An adenomatous tumor characterized by the presence of much fibrous tissue.— fi'bro-ad'i-pose. a. Both fibrous and adipose: said of a form of tissue.— fi'bro-an'gi-o'ma, n. [-MATA, pl.] A tumor of angioma containing a large proportion of connective tissue.— fi'bro-ar'e-nous, a. Of or pertaining to fibers and areolar tissue.— fi'bro-blast, n. A connective-tissue cell.— fi'bro-blas'tic, a.— fi'bro-brin-chi'tis, n. Pathol. A bronchitis characterized by the formation of fibrinous exudate.— fi'bro-cal-ca're-ous, a. Fibrous and containing calcareous bodies, as the integument of a holothurian.— fi'bro-car'ci-no'ma, n. Pathol. A carcinoma containing fibrous tissue.— fi'bro-car'ti-lage, n. A variety of cartilage that has fibers in its matrix.— fi'bro-car'ti-lag'i-nous, a.— fi'bro-ca'se-ous, a. Both fibrous and cheesy: said of a form of tissue.— fi'bro-cel'lu-lar, a. Composed of fibers and cellular tissue.— fibrocellular tumor, same as FIBROMA.— fi'bro-chon-dri'tis, n. Inflammation of a fibrocartilage.— fi'bro-chon-dro'ma, n. Section from a human al, a. Composed of fibers, cartilage, and intervertebral disk. bone, as the human skeleton.— fi'bro-cyst'al-line, a. Of crystalline material arranged in fibrous parallel rows.— fi'bro-cys'tic, a. Fibril-bearing; dissociating, or feather-like columns or fibers.— fi'bro-cyst'o'ma†. n. Pathol. A fibroma filled with cysts. fi'bro-cys-to'ma†.— fi'bro-cyt'ic, a.— fi'bro-e-las'tic, a. Denoting a tissue made up of both white fibrous and yellow elastic connective tissue.— fi'bro-fer'rite, n. Mineral. A delicately fibrous, pale-yellow, hydrous ferric sulfate ($Fe_2S_3O_{12}$), occurring in the Copiapite group.— fi'bro-gli-o'ma, n. A glioma in which considerable fibrous tissue occurs.

Other words beginning with this prefix will be found in vocabulary place, either singly or in groups.

fi'broid, 1 fai'broid; 2 fī'broid, a. Pathol. Of the nature or form of fiber; containing fibers; characterized by the growth or formation of fibrous tissues. [< FIBER + -OID.] — fibroid degeneration, a growth or change substituting fibrous for normal tissue. [BROMA.

fi'broid, n. Pathol. 1. Same as MIOMYOMA. 2. Same as FIfi'bro-in, 1 fai'bro-in; 2 fī'bro-in, n. Chem. A white amorphous compound contained in raw silk, cobwebs, and the horny tissue of sponge-skeletons. [< L. fibra, fiber.]

fi'bro-lam'el-lar, a. Mineral. A mass resulting from the division of a fibrous mineral, such as asbestos, into lamellæ or flakes.— fi'bro-li-po'ma, n. A fibroma in which consider-

fi-bro'ma, 1 fai-brō'ma; 2 fi-brō'ma, n. [-MA-TA, pl.] A fibrous tumor. [< L. fibra, fiber.] — fibroma molluscum, a tumor formed of connective tissue arising from the deeper layers of the skin.— fi-bro'ma-tous, a.

fī'bro-mem'bra-nous, a. Consisting of a membrane of fibrous tissue.— fī'bro-mu'cous, a. Composed of fibrous tissue and mucous membrane.— fī'bro-mus'cu-lar, a. Med. Having connective and muscular tissues intermingled; as, a fibromuscular tumor.— fī'bro-my-i'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of a fibromuscular tumor.— fī'bro-my-o'ma, n. A muscular tumor containing a considerable proportion of fibrous substance.— fī'bro-my-om'a-tous, a.— fī'bro-myx-o'ma, n. Pathol. I. A fibrous tumor in which there is a formation of mucous tissue. 2. A fibrous tumor complicated with swelling due to accumulation of serous fluid.— fī'bro-myx'o-sar-co'ma, n. A myxosarcomatous tumor consisting largely of fibrous tissue.— fī'bro-neu-ro'ma, n. Pathol. A small painful tumor, containing a large proportion of fibrous substance, formed on a nerve or embedded in nerve-tissue.— fī'bro-nu'cle-a-ted, a. Describing or of a tissue, displaying many nuclei and fibers.— fī'bro-pap-il-lo'ma, n. A tumor that combines the characters of the fibroma and papilloma.— fī'bro-plas'tic, a. Med. Tending to form fibrous tissue; as, a fibroplastic tumor in which fibrous substance is formed from cellular tissue.— fī'bro-plate, n. Anat. The disk of cartilage between the surfaces of certain joints; an intervertebral fibrocartilage.— fī'bro-pu'ru-lent, a. Consisting of fibrinous flakes commingled with pus.— fī'bro-sar-co'ma, n. Pathol. A tumor containing a considerable quantity of fibrous substance.— fī'bro-sar'cous, a. Composed of fibrous tissue with fleshy fibers.— fī'bro-sar'tous, a.

fī-bro'sis, 1 fai-brō'sis; 2 fī-brō'sis, n. Pathol. A morbid tendency to the formation of fibrinous tumors, due to arterial degeneration. fī-bro'ma-to'sis†.

fī'bro-spon'gi-an, n. One of a division of sponges with a fibrous skeleton, including the commercial sponges and glass-sponges.— fī'bro-spon'gi-an, a. & n.— fī'bro-sus'cu-lar, a. Bot. Consisting chiefly of woody fibers and vessels.— fibrovascular bundle, a bundle of string-like fibrovascular tissue.— fibrovascular tissue, tissue composed of elongated thick-walled and generally tuiform elements, as wood and bast.

fī'brous, 1 fai'brus; 2 fī'brus, a. Composed of or having the character of fibers; as, the fibrous structure of asbestos. [< L. fibra, fiber.]

Give me of your roots, O Tamarack!
Of your fibrous roots, O larch-Tree!
My canoe to bind together.
LONGFELLOW Hiawatha pt. vii, st. 8.

— fibrous slab, a composite building-material used in place of plaster and wood for finishing the interiors of houses.— fī'brous-ly, adv.— fī'brous-ness, n.

fib'ster, n. [Humorous.] One who tells fibs; a fibber.

fib't-la, 1 fib'yu-la; 2 fib'yu-la, n. [-LAE, 1 -li; 2 -li, pl.]

1. Anat. The outer and smaller of the two bones that form the skeleton of the lower leg. SEE TIBIA. 2. Surg. A needle used for sewing up wounds. Enlarged. 3. Masonry. An iron device to fasten stones together. 4. Archeol. An ornamental brooch of the type of a safety-pin, common Fibula.

1. Fibula from a Gallo-Italian early as in the bronze age. grave in North Italy (Gioni). 2. [L., clasp, < figo, fasten.] — Anglo-Saxon bronze fibula found in Kent.

fib'u-lad, adv. Same as FIBSTER.

fib'u-lar, a. Of or pertaining to the fibula.— fib'u-lo-cal-ca'ne-al, a. Of or pertaining to the fibula and the calcaneum or heel-bone.

fib'u-lo-tar'sal, a. [< FIBULA + TARSAL.] Anat. The bone or cartilage of the first row of the tarsus on the fibular side: represented in man by the calcaneum or heel-bone. < FIBULA.]

-fic, suffix. From L. -ficus, < facio, make or render: signifying the making, rendering, or causing; as, beatific, scientific.

F. I. C. abbr. Fellow of the Chemical Institute.

-fication, suffix. From L. -ficatio, -onis, < -fico, < facio, make: signifying the making, rendering, or causing to be of a certain sort or character; as, beatification; glorification; pacification; specification.

fice, 1 fais; 2 fīs, n. [Local, U. S.] A small dog of no particular breed, the usually terrier-like.

fich'at, n. Same as FITCHET.

fi-ché', 1 fi-shē'; 2 fī-chy', a. Her. Same as PITCHÉ.

Fich'te, 1 fik'te; 2 fīk'te, Johann Gottlieb (yō'hän'gôt'lēp), (1762–1814). A German philosopher. SEE IDEALISM.— Fich'te-an, a. & n.

Fich'te-an-ism, 1 fik'ti-an-izm; 2 fīk'te-an-izm, n. The philosophy of J. G. Fichte, founded upon and elaborating certain features of the Kantian system. Fichte maintained the sole reality of the conscious self or individual ego, which by its activity gives rise to the not-self, or non-ego, as self-knowledge is only possible in connection with knowledge of the non-ego. Kant taught that experience was dualistic, being derived from the concurrent action of sensation, the product of things in themselves as they affect the mind, and thought, the spontaneous activity of the conscious self. Fichte denied this dualism, insisting that the sense element in experience can not be traced to the action of objects independent of the perceiving subject. He made that which we call the world a mere product of the ego, existing only in, through, and for it. This ego is not, however, the phenomenal or empirical self, but a transcendental ego, which in all individuals, which, when all the limiting elements of finitude are extracted from it, is equivalent to God. Ethically, Fichte insisted upon the absolute sovereignty of the ego as an intelligent being, and his religion resolved itself into a belief in the moral order of the universe, involving as a necessary corollary the immortality of the ego, inasmuch as no ego, having once become real by the act of consciousness, can ever perish. He attempted to found a single system, which he termed the Science of Knowledge, by deducing a priori from the ego the above and various other categories, and also in a similar manner to create a natural philosophy by deducing the a priori grounds of time and space; and finally, by bringing his practical philosophy, or Theory of Right, into a priori connection with the philosophy of nature, to establish moral principle as the essence of reality, the very core of universal existence. His doctrine had a profound effect upon the German school of philosophy, especially through the influence he exerted upon Hegel.

fich'tel-ite, 1 fik'tel-sit; 2 fīk'tel-it, n. Mineral. A greasy, white, translucent, brittle mineral resin ($C_{19}H_{34}$), crystallizing in the monoclinic system. [< Fichtel mountains, Bavaria.] fichtite.

fich'u, 1 fish'u or (F.) fi'shü'; 2 fīch'u or (F.) fi'shü', n. [F.] 1. A three-cornered cape worn over the shoulders with the ends crossed upon the bosom and tied at the back of the waist. 2. A triangular piece of muslin, lace, or any light material worn about the neck.

Fichu, as Worn in the 18th Century.

fic't-form, 1 fik'i-form; 2 fīc'i-form, a. Of the peculiar form of a fig. < L. ficus, fig, + -FORM.]

fick, 1 fik; 2 fīk, vi. [Prov. Eng.] To struggle; kick.

fick'fack, 1 fik'fak; 2 fīk'fāk, vt. [PICK'LED, FICKLE; PICK'LING.] 1. [Scot.] To perplex; embarrass; confound. 2†. To deceive; flatter.

fick'le, a. 1. Unduly changeable in feeling, judgment, or purpose; wavering; inconstant; capricious.

Wert thou more fickle than the restless sea,
Still should I love thee.
MORRIS Jason bk. ix, st. 2.

2. [Prov. Eng.] Dangerous; perilous. 3†. Treacherous; deceitful. < AS. ficol, crafty, < (ge)fic, deceit.]

SYN. capricious, changeable, changeful, inconstant, fitful, inconstant, irresolute, mutable, shifting, unstable, unsteady, vacillating, variable, veering, wavering, whimsical.— ANT. constant, decided, determined, firm, fixed, immutable, invariable, resolute, stanch, steady, unalterable, unchanging, uniform.— fick'le-mīdge", n. An American fly (Sciara inconstans), whose larvæ live in the earth of hotbeases and injure the roots and crowns of plants. fick'le-ness, n.— fick'ly, adv. I. [Rare.] In a fickle manner. 2†. Deceitfully.

fi'co, 1 fī'kō; 2 fī'co, n. [It.] 1. A fig's worth; a fig: used in contemptuous depreciation. 2. A gesture of contempt made by thrusting the thumb between two fingers or into the mouth; a fig of Spain. SEE FIG. fī'go†.

Fi-col'de-a, 1 fi-kol'di-a; 2 fī-col'de-a, n. pl. Bot. A family of annual or perennial herbs — the ice-plant family — of the order Chenopodiales, usually prostrate, with mostly fleshy stems and leaves and clusters of often bright-colored flowers. fic'tilia, n. Any fictile article.

fic'tion, 1 fik'shən; 2 fīc'shon, n. 1. The act of feigning or imagining that which does not exist or is not true.

To indulge the power of fiction, and send imagination out upon the wing, is often the sport of those who delight to range only in the fields of speculation.
JOHNSON Rasselas p. 207. (G. r. r.)

2. That which is feigned or imagined, as opposed to that which is true; as, truth is stranger than fiction.

The fact cannot be bent and remain fact; in so far as the poet does bend it to verges towards fiction — he makes history a fable.
D. J. Conan Shakespeare p. 120. (Harper & co. 1887.)

3. Lit. (1) A prose work in narrative form in which the incidents, characters, and scenes are partly or wholly imagined; a novel. (2) The department of literature that embraces fictitious narrative: used generally in the phrase prose fiction.

Fiction may be divided into two departments: (a) the romance proper, the product of the fancy, and (b) the novel proper, the product of imagination or artistic construction.
SEE CONSTRUCTION; NOVEL; ROMANCE.

To vitalize fiction there is needed creative faculty, with rare parts to work with.
G. H. CALVERT in Jobert's Thoughts p. 12. [w. v. s. 1867.]

4. A legal assumption, for the furtherance of justice, that a thing is true which was, strictly, not true, or false. Fiction in the old Roman law was, correctly, a term used in pleading, and denoted a false allegation on the part of the plaintiff which the defendant might not legally deny, its object being to bring the case into jurisdiction. Fictions must not be confused with presumptions of law, or estoppels. A notion of law takes for granted as true what is either false, or is admitted to be false as to the particular assumption, is at least likely to be true. Fictions have been classified under the following five heads, viz.: Abeyance, when the fee of land is presumed to exist, without any specified owner during the term of an outstanding freehold estate; the case of remitter, by which one who has been wrongfully put out of possession of his lands, afterward acquiring a defective title, has his original good title revived; Relation, by which acts performed at the present is considered as having been done at a former time; presumption, by which, as in the case of all other presumptions, because one fact is found another shall be presumed to be true, and representation, by which the heir, executor, or administrator occupies the place of the deceased. There are several other fictions, however, which are essential to fiction: first, the impossible may not be assumed; second, no fiction may be utilized to work an injury, and third, a fiction may not be carried beyond the point which was the cause of its creation.

Such was the sanctity of law that a father created by legal fiction was in all respects treated with the same veneration and affection as if he were the child sprung from the most unquestioned footing of natural right. DE QUINCEY Cæsars p. 155. [r. & r.]

5. [Rare.] The act of forming or making. [< L. fictio(n-), < fictus; see PICTILE.]

SYN.: allegory, apolog, fable, fabrication, falsehood, figment, invention, legend, myth, novel, romance, story. Fiction is chiefly used of a narrative designed to portray human life, with or without a practical lesson; a romance portrays what is picturesque or striking, as a mere fiction may not do; novel is a general name for any continuous fictitious narrative, especially a love-story. The moral of the fable is expressed formally; the lesson of the fiction, if any is inwrought. A fiction is studied; a myth grows up without intent. A legend may be true, but can not be historically verified; a myth has been received as true at some time, but is now known to be false. A fabrication is designed to deceive; it is a less odious word than falsehood, but is really stronger, as a falsehood may be a sudden unpremeditated statement, while a fabrication is a series of statements carefully moulded and fitted together in order to deceive; the falsehood is all false; the fabrication may mingle the true with the false. A figment is something imaginary which the one who utters it may or may not believe to be true; we say, "That statement is a figment of his imagination." The story may be either true or false, and covers the various senses of all the words in the group. SEE ALLEGORY.— ANT.: certainty, fact, history, reality, truth, verity.— fic'tion-al, a. Belonging to or characteristic of fiction; created by fiction; ideal.

fi"de-i-com-mis'sum, 1 fai"dı-ai-ke-mis'um; 2 fī"de-ĭ-cŏ-mĭs'ŭm, n. [-SA, pl.] Rom. & Civ. Law. A devise or bequest coupled with a request to the party named to give the property to a third party who could not hold directly under the will; a trust estate. The beneficiary under a fideicommissum, as originally constituted, had no absolute right, and receipt of the gift by him depended on the moral obligation of the devisee. In the reign of Augustus steps were taken to enforce the performance of these trusts, and subsequent enactments under Justinian made them binding. The trustee became known as the hæres fiduciarius and the beneficiary as the hæres fideicommissarius. The fideicommissum differed from the modern trust, inasmuch as under the latter the estate vests in the trustee and his cestui que trust at one and the same time; under the former the fideicommissary did not acquire a vested interest until after the fiduciary had fulfilled the terms of his trust, and his interest lapsed in toto if he predeceased the fiduciary. Fideicommissa were either particular or universal, the former a bequest of a particular subject, or a part only of the inheritance, the latter embracing the whole estate.

In Holland, the principles of the civil law as to fideicommissa form an important branch of the law in regard to landed estates.

The holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true. Heb. ix, 24.

5. Any personage or character, especially one who is active or conspicuous; one who plays a prominent part.

All history presents to sadder glance of thoughtful mind the blind and deprived of reason, wandering through the rooms of his palace, addressing imaginary parliaments.

THACKERAY Four Georges, George I. p. 99. [n. & r. 1891.]

6. The appearance that a person or his conduct makes; the career of or display made by a person or thing; especially, distinguished appearance or standing or marked prominence; distinction; as, he made a great figure.

Like the Persians, they make a splendid figure every where but at home. GOLDSMITH Citizen p. 5. [c. n. d. 1891.]

7. A character representing a number, especially one of the Arabic numerals; any of the nine digits or the cipher, or a digit as distinguished from a cipher; hence, amount stated in numbers; price; value; as, the figure 5; that is a low figure for that article. 8. [Colloq.] Arithmetic as a high figure. 8. One of the regular movements or divisions of a dance, in which a certain set of steps or evolutions is completed. 9. Something conjured up by the imagination; a fancy; fantasm; imagination; idea.

10. Rhet. A form of expression that deviates intentionally from the ordinary mode of speech for the sake of more powerful, pleasing, or distinctive effect; pictorial or poetic language.

Rhetorical figures may be classed as follows: I. Those depending (1) on the kind of words employed, tropes, and (2) on the number of words employed, (a) repetition and (b) ellipsis. II. Those depending on the representative imagery employed. (1) Figures that consist in a change of the presentation of the represented object — (a) in nature, personification; (b) in relations, action. (2) Figures of the mind-picture. (2) Those consisting in a deviation from the ordinary mode of expressing the views or conception of the speaker, embracing (a) those in which another is personated, prosopopeia; (b) those in which another is addressed, apostrophe; and (c) those in which the conception is changed from reality, including irony, doubt, and interrogation. (4) Those depending on the structure of the sentence, as (a) on its order, inversion; (b) on its connection, synchysis; (c) on its completeness, apostrepsis; (d) on its fulness, sententiousness.

11. Gram. An intentional deviation from ordinary form or construction, as in syntax, euphony, or prosody.

(1) Figures of syntax, in which the construction departs from the usual rule, include ellipsis, zeugma, pleonasm, enallage, hyperbaton, hysterology, anastrophe, and hysteron proteron. (2) Figures of euphony, in which the form of a word is changed, embrace aphæresis, prosthesis, syncope, epenthesis, apocope, paragoge, diæresis, synæresis, metathesis, and commutation (of one letter for another). (3) Figures of ancient prosody include diæresis, diastole, ecthlipsis, synæresis, synalepha, synaphea, and systole. See these words.

12. Logic. The character of a syllogism with reference to the places occupied by the middle term in the major and minor premises.

In the first figure the middle term is subject of the major and predicate of the minor premise; in the second figure it is predicate of both premises; in the third figure, subject of both; in the fourth figure, predicate of the major and subject of the minor premise. Designating the predicate of the conclusion (the major term) by P, the subject (the minor conclusion) by S, and the middle term by M, the following arrangements of letters will represent the four figures:

I.	II.	III.	IV.
M — P	P — M	M — P	P — M
S — M	S — M	M — S	M — S

The figure of a syllogism is important, because on it depends the distribution or undistribution of the terms, and consequently the validity of the argument. See MOOD.

13. Mus. (1) Any short succession of notes, either as melody or a group of chords, which produces a single, complete and distinct impression; a musical phrase. Grove *Mus. Syn.: beautiful, clarified, clear, comminuted, dainty, delicate, elegant, excellent, exquisite, canny, keen, minute, nice, polished, pure, sensitive, smooth, subtile, tenuous, thin. Fine (i. finis, end) denotes that which has been brought to a full end, finished. From this notion arose many derivative meanings, running out, among words quite remote from each other to be alike synonyms of fine. That which is truly finished, brought to an ideal end, is excellent of its kind, and beautiful, if a thing that admits of beauty; as, a fine woman, fine trees, a fine woman, a fine morning; if a thing that admits of the removal of impurities, it is not finished till these are removed, and hence fine signifies refined and purified; as, fine gold. That which is finished is apt to be polished, smooth to the touch, minutely exact in outline; hence fine comes to be a synonym for all words that denote delicate exquisite; as, fine manners, a fine touch, fine perceptions. As that which is delicate is apt to be small, by an easy extension of meaning fine becomes a synonym for minute, comminuted; as, a fine thread, fine sand; or for slim, tenuous, thin; as, fine lace, fine wire; and as a thin edge is keen, sharp, fine becomes also a synonym for these words; as, a fine point, a fine edge. See BEAUTIFUL, CLEVER, DELICATE, and compare big, blunt, clumsy, coarse, great, heavy, huge, immense, large, rude, stout, thick.

Fine, from its shortness and apparent simplicity of meaning, is used with great freedom and variety to express delicacy, slenderness, or appreciation or approbation in general, through lack of care or disregard for accuracy in selecting an adjective that would more exactly describe the subject of commendation. It is the first element in numerous compounds, many of which are self-explaining; as, fine-featured, fine-grained, fine-hatched, fine-spoken.

II. i. To reach or come to an end; terminate; cease; die. [< OF. finiss-, fenis-, stem of finir, < L. finio, < finis, end.]

Syn.: cease, close, complete, conclude, end, expire, stop, terminate. That ends, is ended, or which there is no more, whether or not more was intended or needed; that is closed, completed, concluded, or finished which has come to an expected or appropriate end. A speech may be ended almost as soon as begun, because of the speaker's illness, or of tumult in the audience; in such a case, the speech is neither closed, completed, nor finished, nor, in the strict sense, concluded. An argument may be ended with nothing proved: when an argument is concluded all that is deemed necessary to prove the point has been stated. To finish is to do the last thing there is to do; as, "I have finished my course." 2 Tim. iv, 7. Finish has come to mean, not merely to complete in the essentials, but to perfect in all the minor details, as in the expression "to add the finishing touches." The enumeration is completed; the poem, the picture, the statue is finished. To terminate may be either to bring to an arbitrary or to an appropriate end; as, he terminated his English lectures terminated in a cross. See ACCOMPLISH, ACHIEVE; CEASE.— Ant.: see synonyms for BEGIN.

[< AS. fȳr.] SYN.: blaze, burning, combustion, conflagration, flame. — Combustion is the essential fact which is at the basis of the visible phenomenon which we call fire; combustion being the chemical combination evolving heat, and extending from slow processes, such as those by which the heat of the human body is maintained, to the processes producing the most intense light, also, as in a blast-furnace, or on the surface of the sun. Fire is always attended with light, as well as heat: blaze, flame, etc., designate the mingled light and heat of a fire. Combustion is the scientific, fire the popular term. A conflagration is an extensive fire. Compare synonyms for LIGHT.

—ascending fires, fireworks that rise in the air, as rockets and girandoles.— automatic fire, a compound that takes fire on being exposed to the sun.— Bengal f., a colored fire varying in composition, which may be blasted as follows: sulfur 4, meal-powder 4, antimony 2, lampblack 16 parts. Bengal light;— blind f., fuel so arranged on the grate as to be readily lighted.— central f. 1. According to the Pythagoreans, a fire at the center of the universe. Copernicus and others identified the central fire with the sun. 2. The molten matter at the center of the earth.— colored f., a mixture of easily combustible ingredients, as sulfur with some mineral salt that burns with a colored light, used for signals, fireworks, etc. The following are typical mixtures: Blue, potassium chlorate 15, potassium nitrate 10, copper oxid 30, and sulfur 15 parts; green, barium chlorate 12, potassium nitrate 10, copper oxid 30, and sulfur 15 parts; red, strontium nitrate 40, potassium chlorate 10, sulfur 13, and antimony sulfid 4 parts; yellow, ammonium nitrate 24, sulfur 7, and sodium nitrate 24 parts; white, potassium nitrate 24, sulfur 7, and arsenic sulfid (red) 2 parts; white (dazzling) is produced when powdered magnesium or aluminum is burned. The system of night-signals by means of colored fires containing chlorates, invented by F. F. Coston, an American naval officer, is used in the United States navy, and has also been adopted by the French and German governments.
